PHILADELPHIA, July 6.—The number of cash admissions to the Centennial Exhibition yesterday was over fifty-one thousand, this being the largest number of paying visitors since the opening day.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, July 6.—There was a tornado here yesterday. Three persons were killed and several hurt. Twenty buildings were demolished. The blow lasted but an instant.

AUGUSTA, ME., July 8.—Mr. Blaine has accepted the senatorship. The vacancy in the House of Representatives will not be filled until the regular State election in September.

PHILADELPHIA, July 9.—Thermometer yesterday, 99. Several more deaths reported from heat.

TRENTON, July 9.—Thermometer, 110° in the shade. One hundred and seventy men at Camp Bedle were prostrated; many are in a dangerous condition. Thirty dropped unconscious as the brigade stood in dress parade to night. Gov. Bedle's son fell, but recovered.

Later.—The prostration is increasing. Six out of seven of the brigade physicians are down. Every available Trenton physician was called to assist. Gov. Bedle has ordered the First Brigade home.

NEW YORK, July 9.—Castle Garden caught fire this afternoon and was totally destroyed.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Recently the Postmaster General authorized the statement that he had no expectation then to remain in the office until the fourth of March. Yesterday the Postmaster General called on the President on business and was informed that his resignation would be acceptable. He immediately wrote it. Judge J. N. Tyner, now Second Assistant Postmaster General, will succeed Jewell.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA, July 4.—Turkish official accounts of the battle of Slevcar say: The Servians crossed the frontier on Monday; a sharp encounter followed, which soon became general. Osman Pasha, repulsing the Servians, entered their territory as far as Latschar, carrying all neighboring Servian positions. Reported loss of the Servians, two thousand; the Turks' comparatively trifling.

PARIS, July 5.—It is reported that sanguinary fighting has occurred near Netschar, Gen. Tchernyeff occupying commanding positions, the Turks being defeated.

The Correspondence Universelle states that the Khedive has furnished the Porte twelve thousand men.

A council of ministers discussed the Eastern news. It is thought all the European powers will adopt a policy of non intervention, to which France is unalterably attached.

BELGRADE, July 5.—From Servian official sources: Hostilities commenced on the southeastern frontier. The Servians were successful in several engagements, and captured the fortified camp of Babinagartarian by assault. After three hours' fighting the Turks abandoned their arms and baggage. The River Drina was crossed on Monday.

HAVANA, July 6.—Advices from Mexico to June 28 have been received.

No important engagement had occurred between the government and revolutionary forces, as the latter avoid a general engagement and appear to be unwilling to risk battle.

Minor military events are generally favorable to the government.

The rainy season, which was beginning, will impede operations.

Preliminary elections for President will be held July 9. There was no opposing candidate to President Lerdo. The revolutionists are trying to prevent the holding of elections, and in a majority of districts may prevent a constitutional election. The revolutionists claim that the re-election of Lerdo will insure his overthrow, though the government is at present able to maintain itself.

BERLIN, July 6.—Gen. Tchernayeff has turned the Turkish flank at Tritsch, and is marching on Sophia by way of Pirot.

The Russian navy in the Black sea is preparing for active service.

Arms and ammunition are continually arriving in Servia from Russia and Roumania.

ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT, July 7.—Ten regiments of Egyptian troops are leaving to-day for Constantinople.

PARIS, July 8.—The Journal des Debats has the following latest news from the seat of war: The Servians have captured Rachka. Gen. Tchernayeff's tactics are compelling the Turks to withdraw beyond Dulanta. The balance of advantage so far is slightly in favor of the Servians.

An official telegraphic dispatch received at Belgrade announces that after ten hours' desperate fighting at Rachka the Turks have fled to Novivaras. The Servians have occupied the territory between Rachka and Novivaras. The Servian loss was inconsiderable. The army under Gen. Zack crossed the frontier near Yavaco on Thursday.

The Little Horn Massacre.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Gen. Hancock arrived this morning. It is supposed, for consultation over the terrible situation of affairs in the Indian country.

There has been no official account of the following disaster, which seems well confirmed. Gen. Custer found the Indian camp at twenty-five lodges on Little Horn, and immediately attacked with five companies, charging into the thickest of the camp. Nothing is known of the operations of this detachment after the charge as they were only traced by their dead.

Maj. Reno attacked the lower part of the camp with the seven remaining companies.

Gen. Custer, his two brothers, his nephew and his brother-in-law, with about three hundred others, were killed.

Only thirty-one were wounded; two hundred and seven men are buried in one place.

The Indians surrounded Reno's seven companies and held them in the hills one day, away from water. Gen. Gibbon's force and then came in sight, and the Indians broke camp and left in the night, the remnant of the Seventh Cavalry and Gibbon's command returning to the mouth of Little Horn, where there is a steamboat.

The Indians got the arms of the killed soldiers.

Seventeen commissioned officers were killed.

The whole Custer family died at the head of the column.

BISMARCK, July 7.—Custer left Rosebud on the twenty-second of June with twelve companies of the Seventh Cavalry. On the twenty-fourth a fresh trail was reported. On the morning of the twenty-fifth an Indian village, three miles long and half a mile wide, was reported fifteen miles off. Gen. Custer pushed for it.

They had made seventy-eight miles in twenty-four hours preceding the battle. When near the village the Indians appeared to be moving in hot haste, as if retreating. Reno, with seven companies, was ordered to attack the right, and Gen. Custer, with five companies, vigorously attacked the left of the camp.

Reno felt them with three companies, and was immediately surrounded, and after an hour's fighting, losing Lieuts. Hodgson and McIntosh and twelve men, and several Indian scouts killed and many wounded, cut his way out and gained a bluff three hundred feet high, where he entrenched, and where he was soon joined by Col. Benton with four companies.

Here the Indians made repeated assaults, but were repulsed with great slaughter. The Indians finally gained higher ground than Reno, and, with longer range guns than the cavalry had, kept up a galling fire till night. The Indians renewed the attack at daylight. Up to that time Reno had lost forty-odd killed.

Before reaching the bluff many hand to hand conflicts occurred, the Indians outnumbering the troops ten to one. The men were without water for thirty-six hours, when they determined to reach water at all hazards. Col. Benton made a sally and routed the main body guarding the approach to water. The water was gained, with one killed and seven wounded; the fighting then ceased for the night, during which Reno prepared to resist further attacks. They had now been forty-eight hours fighting, with no word from Custer. There was twenty-four hours more of suspense, and the fighting ended, when the Indians abandoned their village in great haste. Gen. Berry, with Gibbon, commanding his own infantry, had arrived, and as the commanders met the men wept on each others' necks.

Inquiries were then made for Custer, but none could tell where he was. Soon an officer came rushing into camp and related that he had found Custer dead and stripped naked, but not mutilated, and near him his two brothers, Col. Tom and Boston Custer, his brother in-law, Col. Calhoun and his nephew, Col. Yates, Col. Keogh, Capt. Smith, Lieut. Crittenden, Lieut. Sturgis, Col. Cooke, Lieut. Porter, Lieut. Harrington, Dr. Lord, Mack Kellogg, the Bismarck Tribune correspondent, and one hundred and ninety men and scouts. Custer went into battle with Companies C, L, I, F and E of the Seventh Cavalry, and the staff and non-commissioned staff of his regiment and a number of scouts. Only one Crow scout remains to tell the story—all are dead.

Gen. Custer was surrounded on every side by the Indians, and the horses fell as they fought on the skirmish line or in line of battle. Gen. Custer was among the last who fell, but when his cheering voice was no longer heard the Indians made easy work of the remainder.

The bodies of all save the newspaper correspondents were stripped, and most of them were horribly mutilated. Gen. Custer was shot through the body and through the head. The troops cared for the wounded, buried the dead, and returned to their base for supplies and instructions from the General of the army.

Col. Smith arrived at Bismarck last night with thirty-five of the wounded. Indians lost heavily in the battle. The Crow scout survived by hiding in a ravine. He believes the Indians lost more than the whites. The village numbered one thousand eight hundred lodges, and it is thought there were four thousand warriors.

Gen. Custer was directed by Gen. Terry to find and fight the Indians, but not to fight unless Terry arrived with infantry, and with Gibbon's command.

GEN. ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.—This distinguished historical character departed from life in this city on the twenty first of June. However he may have been condemned by parties, his career formed a brilliant and important portion of the history of Mexico, and future historians will differ in their judgment of his merits. Gen. Santa Anna outlived the days of his usefulness and ambition, and died at the ripe age of eighty-four years. Peace to his ashes!—The Two Republics, City of Mexico.

Decisions of the College of Bishops.

The following decisions are taken from the appendix of the last edition of Bishop McTyeire's Manual of the Discipline. They will be read with eagerness, particularly the last one, which relates to a case that has caused a great deal of excitement in the bounds of the St. Louis Conference.

ARE THERE ANY COMPLAINTS?

In a Quarterly Conference, under the question, Are there any complaints? the pastor was complained of for neglect of certain duties, and a record was made of it. The case coming before the Annual Conference, the president decided:

That while it is the duty of a presiding elder to learn all he can concerning the usefulness and acceptability of a pastor—and from no source is he likely to get such reliable information as from official members—nevertheless the Quarterly Conference is not charged with the duty of inquiring into the life and official administration of a member of an Annual Conference. Complaints may not be entertained against him by that body, nor entered on its journal. He is responsible to another ecclesiastical body which has original jurisdiction, and may reprove, suspend or expel him.

Approved. (1875.)

A VERDICT NOT TO BE REVERSED FOR INFORMALITY IN THE TRIAL.

In the trial of a member the charge of immorality was supported by two specifications. He was found guilty and expelled. An appeal to the Quarterly Conference was taken by the accused, and this plea was urged before the appellate court:

That the specification upon which he was convicted belonged to a grade of offense less than immorality, viz.: improper conduct. The presiding elder ruled "that the charge belonged to one class of offenses, and the first specification to another." Whereupon the Quarterly Conference, without considering the testimony given at the trial, proceeded to reverse the verdict of the committee that tried the case. The matter coming before the president of the ensuing Annual Conference, he decided:

"The Quarterly Conference cannot reverse the verdict of the committee except upon the merits of the case. For irregular or illegal proceedings the proper course is to remand the case for a new trial. A reversal of verdict ends the case."

Approved. (1876.)

PRO RATA DIVISION OF RECEIPTS.

The joint board of finance presented to the president of an Annual Conference these questions of law arising out of a disagreement between a presiding elder and one of the preachers in his district—the issue was referred to the joint board for adjustment:

Ques. 1. Since the Discipline provides (chapter 9) that the district stewards shall apportion the presiding elder's claim among the different charges of the district, to be added to the claim of the preacher in charge, and its collection provided for in the same way, has the board of stewards the right to make any other than a pro rata division of the funds collected?

Answer by the president. No.

Ques. 2. In case the board of stewards make other than a pro rata division between the presiding elder and pastor, should the one receiving more than his proportion refund the excess to the other?

Answer by the president. Yes.

Ques. 3. In a reference to the joint board of finance of a disagreement concerning receipts between the presiding elder and the pastor, may this board take into consideration the way each has performed his duties?

Answer by the president. No; the presiding elder and the preacher in charge are responsible to the Annual Conference only for the way in which they discharge their duties.

Approved. (1876.)

HOW AN EXPELLED PERSON MAY REGAIN MEMBERSHIP.

A member was arraigned and tried for immorality, and expelled. He gave notice of an appeal to the ensuing Quarterly Conference; but before the meeting of said Conference he was received into full membership by the pastor of another society in the same city, without confession of the offense for which he had been expelled or any communication with the society that expelled him.

A complaint of maladministration was made against this pastor, by his presiding elder, at the ensuing Annual Conference, and the president of the Conference made the following decisions on questions of law:

Ques. 1. Can any one who has been expelled from the church by due process of law, and who has formally given notice of an appeal to the Quarterly Conference, be restored to membership during the pendency of such an appeal?

Answer by the president. He cannot be; for an appeal, of which due notice has been given, may only be terminated at the Quarterly Conference to which the appeal has been taken.

Ques. 2. Can any one who has been expelled from the church be restored, without confession of the offense for which he was expelled, except in the case (as provided for in the Discipline, sec. 3, p. 152, par. 5) where the Quarterly Conference becomes satisfied that the expelled person is "innocent of the offense for which he was expelled?

Answer by the president. He cannot be; for a confession of anything else would not be a satisfactory evidence of repentance in the sense of the Discipline.

Ques. 3. Can any one expelled from the church be received into its membership again, except in the way provided in the Discipline for the restoration of a member? (See Discipline, chap. 7, sec. 3, par. 5.)

Answer by the president. No; for one who has been excluded from the church, by due process of law, can only be restored regularly by the Quarterly Conference of the society which excluded him, in accordance with an opinion already placed upon the journal of this Conference by the president.

The College of Bishops, having these decisions before them for review, say:

Of Question 1 and answer. We concur in this decision with this understanding: One who has taken an appeal to the Quarterly Conference is at liberty to abandon it; but if he does not prosecute his appeal the effect will be to leave him in the same attitude as if the appellate court had formally concurred in the decision of the lower court.

Of Question 2 and answer. There is some ambiguity here. If instead of the words, "Confession of the offense for which he was expelled," the language of the Discipline in the place cited, had been used, viz., "Giving satisfactory evidence of repentance," we should concur in saying, "He cannot be." But the answer involves an interpretation of language contained in the question which does not necessarily come before us.

Of Question 3 and answer. We think the "No" may be proper; but the words in the answer, beyond that we do not concur in, because:

1. Allusion is made to an opinion which is not before us.

2. Where an expelled member gives "satisfactory evidence of repentance" he may be restored without the intervention of the Quarterly Conference.

3. The restoration of an expelled member, by the Quarterly Conference of the society which excluded him, occurs only when the Quarterly Conference "shall become convinced that he was innocent of the crime for which he was expelled." In this case, of course, no evidence of repentance is required. (1876.)—Western Methodist.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, STAUNTON, VA.—We take pleasure in directing attention to the advertisement of this popular seminary for the education of young ladies. It is located in the city of Staunton, in the center of the far-famed Shenandoah valley, in one of the healthiest climates in the world, where every breeze contributes to the physical vigor of its pupils. In this health-giving climate our Southern daughters, who go with feeble constitutions, soon acquire the vigorous form and blooming cheek of health. It presents attractions unsurpassed if not unequaled in the South. It is conducted by over twenty able and accomplished teachers and officers. Its buildings are home-like and elegant, grounds attractive, scenery grand.

The last session this school was attended by pupils from seventeen different States. One of the laudable aims of this school will be to require its pupils to practice economy, especially in dress. To this end a simple uniform is worn. In this institution no unnecessary bills are allowed, and the expenses of parents and guardians are to be kept within the lowest possible amount. With these advantages, we are not surprised that this popular institution draws its patronage from Maryland and Pennsylvania to Texas. It is indorsed by Profs. Smith, Peters, Holmes, Davis, of the University of Virginia, Bishops Doggett, Marvin, McTyeire, and a host of distinguished men and worthy patrons throughout the South. See advertisement.

MISSIONARY COLLECTIONS.—The second and third quarter drafts drawn by the Bishops on the treasurer of the Board of Missions are now falling due.

In order to enable us to meet them the preachers are hereby requested to forward to me immediately the amounts collected by them in their several charges for foreign missions. Brethren who have not taken up their collections will please do so at once, and forward the same to me.

A. H. REDFORD,
Treas. Board of Missions.

Dr. Young, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, preached twice in Lebanon, July 2, and was present, July 3, in the county court at the opening and probating of the will of the late Mr. William M. Cartmell. The doctor confirms the report of the secular press that Mr. Cartmell has made the Vanderbilt University the residuary legatee of his estate. It is thought the university will get at least $20,000.

After years of controversy the English Methodists seem disposed to favor lay representation in the General Conference. The representative committee have voted that the Conference consist in future of 220 ministers and 220 laymen, and there is no question but that the Conference will ratify their action.

Whitworth Female College.

MR. EDITOR: I made my annual visit to the commencement of Whitworth College last week, and was amply repaid for the long ride. It was an intellectual treat, and filled my heart with beautiful sentiments of love to God and love to man.

The annual sermon was preached by Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, of the Mississippi Conference, on Sunday, June 18. His subject was "The Power of the Resurrection;" his text was written by St. Paul—a grand theme, and profoundly he presented it. His thoughts and illustrations were elevating and sublime.

On Monday eleven young ladies, the seniors, read their compositions, as usual exhibiting a great variety of taste, talent and sentiment, some reaching up to a high literary attainment, others spicy with wit and cultivation. There was a vein of moral and religious thought that reflected favorably upon their alma mater. A college under the patronage of the Conference should show religious training, and, to the praise of Whitworth College, these compositions were fragrant with true piety of thought and devotional sentiment.

In the afternoon the Alumni Association had their annual meeting. Several of their members read literary essays, one young lady recited the centennial anthem, several short speeches were made by friends of the association, and the graduating class were received as members.

On Monday night a grand concert of vocal and instrumental music was given by Prof. Eckhart and his pupils, aided by his accomplished wife. Quite a number of recitations and entertaining scenes were presented. The music, both vocal and instrumental, was excellent, exhibiting skill, taste and great cultivation. A large audience were present, and were well repaid for their profound attention, which was unusually good.

Tuesday, June 21, was commencement day. The fine weather brought together a large audience of patrons and friends of this institution, many from a distance. The exercises were introduced with a fine display of instrumental and vocal music. The salutatory was delivered by Miss Melissa A. Linton, of Brookhaven, who acquitted herself with marked ability and gracefulness. Then followed the annual address by the Rev. C. B. Galloway, of Jackson. After an appropriate exordium, his principal theme was self-culture, addressed to the graduating class, urging the importance of recognizing the fact that they had just reached the commencement of their future education, and, by a review of the literary field before them, bringing to their minds many authorities to sustain his point from the writings of the literati of this and former centuries.

The valedictory was pronounced by Miss Mary Chandler, of Hancock county, daughter of Judge Chandler. Miss Chandler had a hard task to perform. A valedictory is usually a farewell talk; and, while she did not ignore the precedent, she nevertheless gave us some new thoughts connected with these last days at college, and in her parting words made all feel the true character of the scene.

The president then presented to the graduates their diplomas, and made a short address.

One of the best things that occurred at the close of these interesting exercises was the taking up a collection of over $400 to aid in purchasing a library for the college.

This college, as you know, is presided over by Rev. H. F. Johnson, who is assisted by an able corps of professors. It is the property of the Mississippi Conference, and is entitled to the patronage of the church and all who want a thorough education for their daughters.

Yours, T. R.

FROM PRATTVILLE DISTRICT.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed a very interesting session of the Prattville District Conference at this place. The delegates elected to the Annual Conference are: Elbert S. Starr, Robert W. Russell, Charles M. Howard, Samuel P. Smith. Alternates—George L. Smith, Benjamin Rush. The next Conference is to be held at Summerfield.

THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1876.

MY VOICE SHALT THOU HEAR IN THE MORNING.

My voice shall thou hear this morning.
For the shades have passed away,
And out from the dark like a locusts lark,
My heart soars up with the day;
And its burden all is blessing,
And its accents all are song;
For thou has refreshed its slumbers,
And thy strength hath made it strong.

My voice shall thou hear this morning,
For the day is all unknown;
And I am afraid without thine aid
To travel its hours alone.
Give me thy light to lead me,
Give me thy hand to guide,
Give me thy living presence,
To journey side by side.

Sure of eternal morning,
Such that can ne'er decline,
Day that is bright with unfading light
Ever above me shine,
For the night shall all be noontide,
And the clouds shall vanish far,
When my path of life is gilded
By the bright and morning star.

Sunday Morning.

Undeveloped Land.

MR. EDITOR: Reading, recently, a well-written book on the undeveloped West, I was reminded of a land not so difficult of access as the West, and yet as much undeveloped; and it has occurred to me to write some what of it, that possibly I may influence those who are hunting homes to "give it a call," as the merchants say, before going elsewhere.

THE LAND

is that part of west Florida lying between the Chattahoochee river on the east and the Choctawhatchee on the west. Briefly, it may be said of this territory that in it can be produced everything needful to supply the wants, gratify the curiosity or contribute to the pleasure of man. As a general but imperfect description, it is enough to say that mainly it is piny woods, interspersed with hammocks, and here and there sections of rich land, varying in size from a few acres to whole counties. Jackson county, lying along the Chattahoochee river, has in it as fine corn and cotton lands as can be found anywhere in the older settled States. There is an abundance of lime in the soil, and scattered about on the surface may be found large quantities of limestone. Though the water is impregnated with the lime, yet it is not enough so to make it unpleasant to the taste. In Calhoun county, south of Jackson, there is much good land, splendid grazing for cattle, and as fine hammocks for oranges as can be found in south Florida. Orange culture is now carried on extensively in the lower part of this county, and the facilities for getting them to market being superior to those found along the St. John's, it is likely to become a successful rival in supplying the demand for this highly valued fruit. Here, however, one is not confined exclusively to raising oranges, for there is range for abundance of cattle and sheep, so that stock-raising may be a source of revenue not by any means inconsiderable.

In Washington county are located two wonderful sections, known as Holmes Valley and Orange Hill. Holmes Valley is of irregular shape, covering a space, with its numerous "spring heads" and bays, sixteen or eighteen miles long and six or eight wide. Originally it was covered with a dense forest of bay, magnolia, hickory, oak and gum trees, and is now so covered, save in the parts under cultivation. Why it is called a valley I do not know, for it is a broken, hilly country. The land is exceedingly fertile. Twenty-five bushels of corn, thirty bushels of rice or fifteen barrels of sirup is not an uncommon yield per acre. Corn, cane, oats, potatoes, peas, rice and all kinds of vegetables are cultivated here successfully. In this county, on St. Andrew's bay, the orange does as well as in Calhoun county, and the groves recently planted are very promising. While near there lately I heard of one tree which the past year furnished eleven thousand oranges. The piny woods in this and Holmes counties supply pasturage for thousands of cattle and sheep. Large droves of both are seen wandering about, all fat enough for market, and the grass is so abundant that, without doubt, it will furnish good grazing for ten times as many as are now feeding on it.

West of the Choctawhatchee river is found the celebrated Euchee Valley. Like Holmes Valley, on the east, this is very fertile. Here is the far famed Scotch settlement, known as "Knox Hill," where the Presbyterian Church is strong, and where Calvinistic doctrines are believed with unquestioning faith. In this valley and north of it are found the most beautiful springs in the world. These springs vary in size from a few feet in circumference to a half acre in extent, and in depth from a few inches to sixty or eighty feet. At noon the smallest objects may be distinctly seen, at the depth of forty or sixty feet, lying on the white sand bottom, while fishes of every variety gracefully move hither and thither with the assurance of perfect safety.

Of all this land it may be said: It flows with milk and honey. Cattle and bees are found almost everywhere, and milk and honey are seen on every table.

There are no negroes except in Jackson county; hence hogs roam about at will, without danger of being killed and baconized to appease some darkey's appetite; and such a thing as theft is never heard of.

This is a brief but very imperfect description of the land of which I write. A much more attractive picture might have been drawn. I have sought rather to fall below than to go beyond the truth. This land is UNDEVELOPED.

Jackson county has many fine plantations lying out or being but half cared for by the lazy freedmen, who seek only to live above starvation. Outside of this county but little, so far, has been done to develop the resources of west Florida. Here and there are found men of enterprise, who by industry and economy are building up their own fortunes, while they are adding to the prosperity of the country; but it is painful to see how many there are who have no ambition to add to their comforts or even fully to supply their wants. A pole cabin with one room, a few articles of home-made furniture, and enough corn to last till the season arrives for blackberries, fish and honey, are sufficient to satisfy too many. For miles one may travel and never see a patch of corn of more than one or two acres, and too often that little patch is cultivated by the wife and daughters of the man who is out hunting or fishing or cutting logs. Energy, industry and education might develop this into one of the most desirable countries for the home of man.

As there is much here to be done in agriculture, so in religion there is a vast field for improvement. These people, as a general thing, are too poor to supply themselves with the gospel on the congregational plan; hence they have been dependent on the glorious itineracy of the Methodist Church for the bread of life, and that itinerancy has not failed them. There are but few habitations in all this territory which have not been visited by Methodist preachers. But while by this means the people have been supplied with the gospel, and while to many of them it has proved the power and wisdom of God unto salvation, yet the field is too large to be successfully cultivated, and consequently there is in many places a lamentable ignorance of the obligations of the religious life. One is shocked to discover the low ideas of religion that abound. I heard, a short time since, an old woman praising a daughter, whose death had been to her a sore affliction. She mentioned several excellencies of character which the daughter possessed, but laid especial stress on this one: that she "had never hearn her say a cuss word in all her life."

In education, as in religion, there is need of development. But few schools are found, and they are often under the management of illiterate teachers. Hundreds of children are growing up without being able to read and write, and the most gloomy feature of the case is that the people do not see the need of education. There are some neighborhoods—noble exceptions to this statement—where there are good schools, and where the need of education is felt; but what I have said is true of the larger part of the country of which I am writing. In the development of this country there are great difficulties. The preachers must come only as missionaries—the people cannot support them; the farmer must contend with the obstacle of no market till railroads are built; and the teacher must come and wait till he has created a necessity for himself before his services will be rewarded. These difficulties, I believe, will in time be overcome, and then I expect to find this one of the garden spots of the South.

OMERO.

A Dangerous Word.

MR. EDITOR: Dr. Spillman's recent article on "Pride and Vanity" leads me now to express some views long entertained touching the use of the word pride. His quotations showed that according to some authors and lexicographers the word pride is not to be understood as always conveying an evil meaning. Trabue, who is no mean authority where words are concerned, goes so far as to say that "pride is the spring of all human actions." Now, while we are aware that current good usage is the only standard of correct speech, and while we admit that many good people use the word pride intending a good and not a bad sense, still we are disposed to enter our protest against the use of the words pride and proud with approval by Christians. These words occur about one hundred times in the Scriptures, and in every instance they signify, when applied to men, states of the soul of which Jehovah has declared his unqualified disapproval. "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord." If there be one sin which God hates above every other, that sin is pride. We know that terms employed in the Bible often undergo great changes, and even total reversals of meaning, as has occurred in the case of the word let; but with regard to some words we hold that their meanings may no more be changed than the fundamental distinctions of morality may be changed. The words of which we speak are obviously those used in defining our duties, and in marking the distinctions between right and wrong; and the reasons for their fixedness of meaning are evident. Words are not only the instruments of all thought, but the only embodiment of moral ideas. Suppose usage should authorize the dictionaries to define murder to be an innocent pastime, and swearing to be a pleasing recreation (and there are persons in the world who act as if both these definitions were correct,) would Christians then be at liberty to murder and to swear? Words, especially those which lie at the foundation of all morality, must be kept as far as possible fixed in their signification. To change the meaning of a word may be to endanger the salvation of souls. To allow a word whose primary signification is acknowledged by all to be very bad, by a very slight change in the field of its application, and that, too, within the territory of Christian morals, to be regarded as having an entirely good meaning, is certainly a dangerous procedure. We submit that the distinction between that pride which is everywhere denounced in the word of God as fearfully evil, and that pride of which the world so flippantly boasts, is not easily drawn by the popular mind. The Christian world are as much bound to "hold fast the form of sound words," and to use all their influence to hold those words to their proper signification in the public mind, as they are to teach good morals by precept and example, and to resist every prevalent vice of the age. A Christian may not say he is proud. Let him use some other word. We expect sinners to be proud, but servants of the meek and lowly Jesus never.

The general purport of these views, we are happy to know, meets the approval of many wise and pious persons, and of at least one very scholarly Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

W. L. C. HENNIGHTT.

Homer College.

MR. EDITOR: Having just returned from a visit to this institution, I give a few thoughts and facts, that those interested may know that she is still moving onward and upward. I had a truly refreshing feast, and am much gratified and encouraged.

The public examination began on Friday, the sixteenth of June, and closed on the nineteenth—Monday. I was present at the examination of some of the classes, and was greatly pleased at the exhibit of such talents, training and attainments. The pupils reflect great credit upon Dr. T. B Gordon, the president, and Prof. A C Calhoun.

On Tuesday, the twentieth, in the evening, a large audience was delightfully entertained with some fifteen or twenty speeches (declamations and addresses) by the pupils of the school. All did well. It is clearly demonstrated that this important branch of education is well cared for here.

On Wednesday, the twenty-first—commencement day—we had addresses from seven young men. These addresses (the two first excepted) were in every respect their own production.

After the young men had closed Judge Tribble made a few remarks, pointed and plain, to the young men and the patrons, which were well-timed and suited to the occasion. Dr. Gordon then gave one of his short, warm addresses in the way of thanks, and of setting forth the importance of educating the young, and the necessary steps thereto.

Homer College has a live board of trustees. I was with them parts of three days. We had a very pleasant and profitable meeting. Suitable arrangements were made for the progress of the college. The board is determined to do all in its power toward advance steps. Steps were taken to meet the liabilities of the institution. I can assure the friends of the college that her interests are well cared for, and every just and prudent measure is being used for her growth and stability.

The discipline of the institution is very good. Dr. Gordon will not receive or retain a young man who will not be subject to the laws and regulations of the college. Some have failed to enter on this account. I am persuaded that no young man leaves the school worse than he came, but much better.

The college has the confidence of the people (and I might say the sympathy) in the vicinity—through north Louisiana and south Arkansas—which promises a great increase in the matriculates the next scholastic year.

Her financial condition is good, taking all things into consideration.

From what has been seen we are rejoiced, and look with pleasure on the future of Homer College.

The Masonic Female College, located in Homer, under the administration of President Thomas Sly and his accomplished wife, is doing well, and deserves the patronage of the surrounding country. It is a beautiful location, and the president and his wife are very kind and pleasant. I had the pleasure of enjoying their smiles and kind words while in Homer. ROBERT RANDLE.

A Bishop a Great Show.

MR. EDITOR: I presume you have heard of "hard times," though you may have been so fortunate as not to have realized its meaning to the extent that some of your ministerial brethren have. When, after a long and tedious quarter of travail and labor, to see the stewards come up with a quarterly report of $2 or $5, and then you proceed on Sunday to take up a collection for the presiding elder, of whose indispensable visits the whole people are aware, and get a still less amount, and for the ADVOCATE just nothing at all, you would not be surprised if you heard some one speak of hard times. Then, ere one is aware of it, the question comes home to the preacher in charge: What am I to do? How are we to meet the claims of the missionary, Bishops, widows and orphans, etc., on our purse, or that of the church? I do not mean to burlesque any one, for I know that some of them are generous-hearted and praise-deserving. I am decidedly of the opinion that if we could prevail on one of our Bishops to attend our District Conferences, it would be a means of great benefit to the church, both in moral and financial life.

I notice that, regardless of the times, when a show passes through the country there is always, somehow, money sufficient for admittance fee. Those who have not can easily borrow; and "he who has but little has no luck."

A Bishop in many parts of north Louisiana would be a greater show than has visited this section for years. Not long ago I heard a lady say that "she would give more to see and hear one of our Bishops than she would give to see Barnum's Menagerie." This would be a gratification never before enjoyed, though she had been a member for over twenty years, and loyal to all the interests of the church, especially that of contributing to the support of the Bishops, and has doubtless regarded it as a happy privilege to give this way. It would not only be to her a supreme gratification to see one of these beloved and venerable fathers in Israel, but their "name is legion." Especially so would it be to those dear local brethren whose meager circumstances forbid them attending our Annual Conferences and being ordained, as they have desired for years.

Now, Mr. Editor, as a show of this kind will in every way pay, can you not send us one up to visit this forgotten, but not lost, section? If you can—under authority, as you are—you will certainly have the thanks and prayers of the many, as well as those of ONE AMONG MANY.

THE FLIES OF 1776.—The cackling of a goose is fabled to have saved Rome from the Gauls, and the pain produced by a thistle to have warned a Scottish army of the approaching Danes; but we never heard that flies contributed to hasten American independence till we read the following anecdote in Randall's Life of Jefferson:

"While the question of independence was before Congress, it had its meeting near a livery stable. Its members wore 'short breeches' and silk stockings, and, with handkerchief in hand, they were diligently employed in lashing the flies from their legs. So very vexatious was this annoyance, and to so great an impatience did it arouse the sufferers, that it hastened, if it did not aid in inducing them to promptly affix their signatures to the great document which gave birth to an empire republic!

"The anecdote I had from Mr. Jefferson at Monticello, who seemed to enjoy it very much as well as to give credit to the influence of the flies. He told it to me with much glee, and seemed to retain a vivid recollection of the severity of an attack from which the only relief was signing the paper and flying from the flies."

As the rays come from the sun and yet are not the sun, even so our love and pity, though they are not God, but merely a poor, weak image and reflection of him, yet from him alone they come. If there is mercy in our hearts, it comes from the fountain of mercy. If there is the light of love in us, it is a ray from the full sun of love.—Charles Kingsley.

It is reported that the man who "penned a few rambling thoughts" repented afterward and let them out.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

SISTER ADDIE C. CASSADY, daughter of Rev. John W. Norton, was born in Barbour county, Ala., in August, 1848. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South when quite a child, but was never fully satisfied in reference to her spiritual well-being till, in her fifteenth year, during a protracted meeting conducted by her own brother, Rev. W. K. Norton, in Lawrenceville, Ala., she was soundly and joyfully converted. Ever after this she adorned the doctrines of her profession by an upright walk and godly conversation.

She was educated principally at Lawrenceville, under the skillful direction of Rev. J. C. Holmes. But she finished her education at Enon, Ala., under Prof. Douglas. She was a woman of ripe scholarship, refinement and taste. She was an ornament to society and a blessing to the world. Especially in the Sabbath-school she was capable and useful.

In Enon, Ala., December 23, 1874, she was most happily married to Capt. A. A. Cassady, of Lawrenceville. In the relation of wife she was all that an affectionate and devoted husband could desire. Truly she was a "helpmate." She was a comfort to his heart. In the household she presided with dignity and grace.

Personally she was handsome, neat and pleasant. In conversation she was richly gifted. In religion her faith was strong and her convictions clear. Her character was positive and solid. She occupied no middle ground upon vital questions. Her expression of character is explained in the light of her father's careful and diligent training. Her father blessed her with early moral culture, and in return she honored her faithful father by the consistency and beauty of her life.

In her relations to this life she was highly honored. She was the cherished daughter of a Methodist preacher; she was niece of Rev. James Norton, the beloved friend and traveling companion of Bishop McKendree; she was sister of four Methodist preachers—W. K. Norton, E. H. Norton, W. F. Norton and Thomas Norton; she was sister-in-law of two Methodist preachers—J. F. Dickinson and J. J. Cassady; besides others of noble birth and honored lives.

The great goodness of her heart was manifested during her last sickness. She was permitted to linger in heavenly contemplation for several weeks before called hence. She approached death so calmly that it was scarce suspected till a few days before the solemn occurrence. She died in great peace, in the honored place where others had gone before to heaven. At twenty-five minutes past ten P. M., June 21, 1876, she forsook this world amid the tears and cries of the loved of earth, and ascended to the mansions of the skies, there to meet the many precious ones who had preceded her.

She leaves a heart-broken husband, her infant son—J. J. Cassady—many relatives and countless friends to mourn her early departure. A large concourse of sorrowing friends attended her funeral.

A. DOWLING.

MRS. ANN ELIZA DICKS, daughter of Daniel Bass, was born in Fayetteville, N. C., August 7, 1818, and died in Natchez, Miss., June 13, 1876.

Her father settled his family at Woodville, Miss., in 1822. At the age of fifteen years she was received into the Methodist Episcopal Church by Rev. J. C. Burruss. She was first married, in 1838, to Mr. H. Y. Collins, whose death in 1841 left her a widow. In 1845 she was married to George J. Dicks, of Natchez, Miss.

Her life was a beautiful and instructive exhibition of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ purifying, ennobling and sanctifying redeemed humanity. Undemonstrative, yet earnest, her Christianity displayed itself chiefly in a faithful devotion to her domestic duties; especially in constant and prayerful and therefore successful efforts to train aright the children which God had given her. For every benevolent and charitable work her heart and hand were ever ready. Unaffected simplicity and modest sincerity were the ornaments of her character, and gave attractiveness and power to the stronger virtues of which it was composed. But we forbear to speak her praise, however due, even in her absence, since nothing was more offensive to her while she was among us than anything which seemed even the remotest approach to flattery.

Her death was such as her life had promised. Patient in suffering, exclaiming, "How grateful I am that God has dealt so gently with me;" delivering her dying charges to her four sons and her daughter, one by one, with the deliberation of one who was departing on some pleasant journey; hopeful, trustful, she passed through the valley of the shadow of death fearing no evil, like a confiding child whose trembling steps were stayed each moment by a faithful Father's hand. Her cheerful resignation to the will of her heavenly Father was wonderful and edifying to behold. Indeed it was no ordinary privilege to witness the perfect peace and serene confidence in which she died.

With mournful joy we laid her body in the tomb, mourning that one so loved by many hearts should be taken away from us—joyful to behold so happy an exemplification of the power of the grace of God to bless and sanctify and save one of our fallen race. She sleeps in hope of a resurrection to eternal life. W. L. C. HENNIGHTT.

ANDREW HOWMAN TENNANT was born in Sumter district, S. C., April 11, 1809, and died in Escambia county, Fla., April 9, 1875. The affectionate son of a pious mother, with whom he lived until her death, which occurred only a few years since, it is said that he was never known to swerve from his duty to that mother. This speaks volumes. It is not a wonder that lessons of piety, early instilled into his mind, were lasting.

Late in life he was married to Miss Isabel Mackey, who, with five little orphaned children, mourns his loss in realizing the fact that husband and father is gone. The many ordeals through which he passed were fiery, yet he came out conqueror through Christ. His disease (hernia) preyed upon his system for years, rendering him very weak and pinnacled in his last days. Toward the last his suffering was great.

For a number of years he was a member of the Methodist Church, and, according to the statement of those who knew him well, he was known as a man of strict Christian integrity. I think that meekness must have been his leading characteristic in health, for humble and submissive was he in sickness. As his pastor I visited him frequently during his last illness. His conversations were of a heavenly nature. He gave every assurance of his peace with God. The thought of leaving wife and children troubled him for a time, but as he neared the "valley and shadow of death" perfect resignation to the divine will calmed all his fears. His end was peace. On the afternoon before his death I called to see him. It was evident that he would soon be at rest. I asked him: "My brother, is your sky clear?" "Not a cloud," said he, "is before me." "Your faith in God strong?" "Yes," he exclaimed, "I have trusted God a long time. I can say I have never known one of his promises to fail, and I feel like trusting him still; my faith increases."

He died on a calm, holy Sabbath eve. As he was nearing the "turbid stream" the brethren and friends sang the "Land of Beulah;" and as the chorus, "Oh, come, angel band," was borne upward on the air, angels descended to bear his spirit home. God, and a seraphic smile lit up his face, betokening his happy entrance into rest. He suffered much in life, but his sufferings are no more. He fought a good fight; he has laid hold on eternal life.

W. P. DICKINSON.

MRS. VIRGINIA A., wife of T. Johnson, and daughter of John M. and Caroline McGhee, was born in Auburn, Ala., December 30, 1841; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1861; was married in 1868, and died in Rutledge, Ala., May 25, 1876, aged twenty-five years, five months and twenty-five days.

Having been trained by pious parents, and had early religious impressions, gave her young heart to God, and joined the church at the age of twelve years, under the ministry of the Rev. H. J. Hunter. From the date of her reception into the church until the day her death she kept her baptismal vows, never brought a reproach upon the cause of the Savior, but continually adorned the doctrine which she professed. She loved the church of her fathers with a pure devotion, and while in health was a constant attendant upon the services of the sanctuary. During her entire life the subject of this obituary was amiable and kind, affectionate and lovely—a faithful child, an affectionate sister, a faithful wife and a devoted mother. In her death the community has lost a good neighbor, and the church one of its brightest jewels.

During her sickness, though long and painful, she never murmured, and no complaining words ever passed her lips. As far as the future was concerned, Sister Johnson had no fear of death. She was a child of God and an heir of heaven, and was ready to depart and be with Christ. But the thought of leaving her loved ones behind, and her children orphans in the world, was to her a source of great sorrow. When the end came all was peace. In the early morn, while the sun was lighting up the eastern sky, the same tired spirit left its tenement of clay and went home to a blissful immortality. She could not have gone before to heaven. She leaves her husband, father and mother, two children, four brothers, five sisters, and numerous friends and relatives to mourn her loss. A. M. JONES.

MRS. LAMINDA AUGUSTA HALDRIDGE, consort of Mr. John S. Haldridge, Jefferson county, Miss., was born April 3, 1816, and died at the residence of her husband, June 1, 1876.

Mrs. Haldridge was converted and received into the Methodist Church about 18— Her maiden name was Orr. She was married to Mr Haldridge December 3, 18— and became the mother of ten children, three of whom preceded her to the better land. The remaining seven are, without exception, acceptable members of the church of their mother. This of itself is sufficient evidence of her high Christian integrity.

Mrs. Haldridge was of a meek and gentle spirit, was always at her post of duty, and in her quiet way she adorned the doctrine of God, her Savior. She was cheerful and happy-hearted, affable and discreet. Her children loved to counsel with her, and her counsel was always good. They miss her now, yet they rise up and call her blessed, and time will not obliterate from their memory the example and advice she gave them while living. Her house was an example of neatness, order and hospitality. The apostolic injunction, "Use hospitality one to another without grudging," was never ignored in that Christian home.

But she is gone from the evil to come. Let this be the occasion of a nearer approach to the Savior, and of a more thorough consecration to his service, on the part of those who are bereaved by this event. Let the aged husband know that his lifelong companion has simply preceded him to the better land. A few days of separation, and then a reunion in heaven, never to be severed again. W. B. LEWIS.

DIED, December 23, 1875, at the residence of her sisters, near Lauderdale, Miss., Mrs. JULIETTE HENDERSON, aged seventy-four years, seven months and eight days. She joined the Methodist Church when very young, and was a faithful member. After a long illness of three months, God, in his goodness, took her from her sufferings. No one seemed to be more reconciled to the will of God than she was during her sickness, and she had no fears of death. M. E. B.

DIED, in Clarke county, Ala., on the twenty-third of June, little ABBIE, infant daughter of John F. and Dora E. Barbour.

The Christian Advocate.

THE ANGEL UNAWARE.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

Abroad on the landscape pale and cold,
Blurred with a gather of wintry rain,
I gazed and questioned if it could hold
Ever the sweet, old joy again.
The color had faded from earth and sky,
Mists hung low where the light had lain,
And through the willows a fretful sigh
Moaned like a helpless thing in pain.

"My days most darkened as these," I said—
"Out of my life the past summer go;
Its russeted memories, dim and dead,
Shiver along my pathway so.
No more the elastic life come back—
The leap of heart and the spirit-glow
That never had sense of loss or lack,
Whether my lot were glad or no."

But here on my musings broke a child,
Fresh from a rush in the plashing air;
And, kissing my hand, she gayly smiled,
Speaking no word, but leaving there
A handful of heart's-ease; blithe and bright,
What had become of my cloud of care?
It had haloed itself in a ring of light
Over the angel unaware!

Thomas Chalmers.

We remember well our first hearing Dr. Chalmers. We were in a moorland district in Tweeddale, reciting in the country, after nine months in the high school. We heard that a famous preacher was to preach at a neighboring parish church, and all we, a cartful of expressible youngsters, "Calm was the nature as a resting-wheel." The cows, instead of taking wing, were imprudent, and sat still; the cart horses were standing, knowing their way, at the field gates, gossiping and dozing, idle and happy; the moor was stretching away in the pale sunlight—vast, dim, melancholy, like a desert; everywhere were to be seen the gathering people, "sprinkling of the company;" the country-side seemed moving to some one center. When we entered the kirk we saw a notorious character, a drover, who had much of the brutal look of what is worked in, with the knowing eye of a man of the city—a sort of a big Tamer Bell—

"He had a hardness in his eye,
He had a hardness in his cheek."

He was our terror, and we not only wondered, but were afraid when we saw him go in.

The kirk was as full as it could hold. How different it looks to a dark town congregation. There was no fine leisureliness and vague stare; no the dignity and vacancy of eyebrows raised, and mouths open, as is the habit with those that speak little, and look much and at small objects. The minister looked homely in his dress and gait, but having a great look about him, like a mountain among hills. The high school boys thought him like a "big face of ourselves." He looked vaguely round upon his audience, as if he saw in it one great object, not many. We shall never forget his saddle, its general benignity!—how he let the light of his countenance fall on us. He read a few verses quietly; then prayed briefly, solemnly, with his eyes wide open all the time, but not glaring. Then he gave out his text. We forget it, but its subject was: "Death reigns." He stated slowly, calmly, the simple meaning of the words; then suddenly he started, and looked like a man who had seen some great sight, and was breathless to declare it; he told us how death reigned everywhere, at all times and in all places; how we all knew it; how we would yet know more of it. The drover, who had sat down in the middle seat opposite, was gazing up in a state of stupid excitement. He seemed restless, but never kept his eyes from the speaker. The tide set in—everything added to its power—deep called to deep, imagery and illustration poured in; and every now and then the theme—simple, terrible statement—was repeated in one lucid interval.

After overwhelming us with proofs of the reign of Death, and transferring to us his intense urgency and emotion, and after shrieking, as if in despair, these words, "Death is a tremendous necessity," he suddenly looked beyond us, as if to some dismal region, and cried out: "Behold mightier!—who is this? He coming from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah, glorious in his apparel, speaking in righteousness, traveling mighty men in the greatness of his strength, mighty to save." Then in few plain sentences he stated the truth as to sin entering, and death by sin, and death passing upon all. Then he took fire once more, and uttered with redoubled energy and calmness the freshness, the simplicity, the security of the great method of justification. How astonished and impressed we all were! He was as the full thunder—the whole man was an agony of earnestness. The drover was weeping like a child, the tears running down his ruddy, coarse cheeks; his face opened out and soothed like an infant's; his whole body stirred with emotion. We all had insensibly been drawn out of our seats, and were converging toward the wonderful speaker. And when he sat down, after warning each one of us to remember who it was that followed death on his pale horse, and how alone we could escape, we all sunk back into our seats. How delightful to our eyes did the thunder look—exhausted, but sweet and pure! How he poured out his soul before God, in giving thanks for sending the Abolisher of death! Then a short psalm, and all was ended.—North British Review.

Mr. Emerson on Farming.

The farmer's office is precise and important, but you must not try to paint him in rose color; you cannot make pretty compliments to fate and cultivation, whose minister he is. He represents the necessities. It is the beauty of the great economy of the world that makes his comeliness. He bends to the order of the seasons, to weather, the soils and crops, as the sails of a ship bend to the wind. He represents continuous hard labor, year in, year out, and small gains. He is a slow person, timed to nature, and not to city watches. He takes the pace of seasons, plants and chemistry. Nature never hurries; atom by atom, little by little, she achieves her work. The lesson one learns in fishing, yachting, hunting or planting is the manners of nature; patience with the delays of wind and sun, delays of the seasons, bad weather, excess or lack of water—patience with the slowness of our feet, with the largeness of sea and land we must traverse, etc. The farmer times himself to nature, and acquires that livelong patience which belongs to her. Slow, narrow man, his rule is that the earth shall feed and clothe him; and he must wait for his crop to grow. His entertainments, his liberties and his spending must be on a farmer's scale, and not on a merchant's. It were as false for farmers to use a wholesale and massy expense as for States to use a minute economy. But if thus pinched on one side, he has compensatory advantages. He is permanent—clings to his land as the rocks do.

He has grave trusts confided to him. In the great household of nature the farmer stands at the door of the bread-room, and weighs to each his loaf. It is for him to say whether men shall marry or not. Early marriages and the number of births are indissolubly connected with abundance of food; or, as Burke said: "Man breeds at the mouth." Then he is the Board of Quarantine. The farmer is a hoarded capital of health, as the farm is the capital of wealth; and it is from him that the health and power, moral and intellectual, of the cities come. The city is always recruited from the country. The men in cities who are the centers of energy, the driving-wheels of trade, politics or practical arts, and the women of beauty and genius, are the children or grandchildren of farmers, and are spending the energies which their fathers' hardy, silent life accumulated in frosty furrows, in poverty, necessity and darkness.

He is the continuous benefactor. He who digs a well, constructs a stone fountain, plants a grove of trees, by the roadside, plants an orchard, builds a durable house, reclaims a swamp, or as much as puts a stone by the wayside, makes the land so far lovely and desirable, makes a fortune which he cannot carry away with him, but which is useful to his country long afterward. The man that works at home helps society at large with somewhat more of certainty than he who devotes himself to charities. If it be true that not by votes of political parties, but by the eternal laws of political economy, slaves are driven out of a slave State as fast as it is surrounded by free States, then the true abolitionist is the farmer, who, heedless of laws and constitutions, stands all day in the field, investing his labor in the land, and making a product with which no forced labor can compete.—Golden Rule.

Dress and Worship.

It is a singular commentary on modern religious worship that it should be almost invariably performed in full dress. One of the foundation principles of our religion, and, necessarily, of all religions, is humility—constant self-abasement in the presence of an offended superior Being, for whose forgiveness we supplicate. The ancient Jewish prophets were accustomed to the simple garb of robe, girdle and sandals; and on occasions when they sought to mortify their remnants of pride they clothed themselves with sackcloth, and sprinkled ashes and dust on their heads. The Jewish kings, too, in seasons of national affliction, concealed sackcloth next their skin, beneath the royal robes. But we make worship an occasion for display of pride and dress. We approach the crimson cushions on which our sins are to be confessed, arrayed with a splendor that Solomon in all his glory could hardly equal. This nominal act of humiliation is a real act of vain-glory. Studied garments, dusty shoes, unkempt beard and ungraceful kneeling are out of the question. They would be considered inexcusable violations of the taste and proprieties which are the supreme considerations in well-regulated churches. The apparel, if not brilliant, must, at least, be rich enough to tell no tale of poverty of purse or spirit; the white hands must be carefully gloved, except when it may be necessary to dazzle those who see them with the flash of the diamonds on their owners' fingers. The hair must be elaborately arranged—not according to the mortifying regime prescribed by the apostle of the Gentiles, but in strict conformity to the latest Paris authorities. The words of life and the songs of Zion must be read out of azure velvet and gold, and the kneeling must be done with the same studied regard for the esthetics of attitudinization that dancing-masters, actors and orators find necessary in their callings. In fact all things must be done not decently and in order only, but according to art and fashion.

Is it a wonder that the two-edged sword of the word preached rarely reaches through all this outer barricade of silk, diamonds, lace, velvet and gold into the human heart of the worshipers? Is it any wonder that the preaching, praying and singing in fashionable churches are so often mere parts in a weekly drama of dress and display? Is it to be wondered that the poor of this earth so rarely take their bruised hearts to the fashionable fountains of living waters to be healed and refreshed and comforted, when their soiled faces and ragged garments would bring down upon them glances of wrath and fury from the patrician wearers of silk and broadcloth?

"What am I made of?" asked a little girl, fresh from her Sunday school lesson, as she essayed to show off her knowledge to a younger sister. "I don't know," was the honest answer. "What does mamma sweep up from the floor?" was the first speaker's next trial in the Socratic method. "Pins, needles and hairpins," was the prompt but unexpected response.

The Mexican rebels have taken Jalapa. Probably didn't know what it was.

Parental Sympathy.

Next to that of justice, which is, I believe, a heavenly instinct with almost all young children, their strongest need, and the most powerful influence with them, is sympathy. And this the wise parent will give at all times and under all circumstances. A child accustomed to find in the mother's bosom a perpetual refuge, to bring there all its little woes—so small to us, to it so large—to get answers to all its questions, interest in all its discoveries, sympathy in all its amusements—over a child so trained the influence of the mother is enormous, nay, unlimited. What a safeguard to both, not only in childhood, but in after years! To feel that she is an absolute providence to her child—that from babyhood it has clung to the simple belief that mamma must be told everything, and can right everything. What an incalculable blessing, lasting till death and after—the remembrance of a mother from whom the child has never received anything but love!

Love, the root of sympathy, is the most powerful agent in the bringing up of children. Not mere caresses; yet these are not to be despised, as being "the outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace." The earliest development of our nature is so entirely objective rather than subjective, practical rather than ethical, that a kiss or a cuddle at all times is a much more potent agent in moral education than stern elder folk believe. Love, not in a word only, but in action; love, ever at hand to remove small evils, to lessen great ones; to answer all questions and settle all difficulties; to be a refuge in trouble, a sharer in joy, and a court of appeal where there is always certainty of sympathy, if not redress—this is the sort of thing which gives to parents their highest, noblest influence—beginning with birth and ending only with the grave.—Sermons Out of Church, by Miss Mulock.

FASHIONABLE BONNETS AND NEURALGIA.—A physician of a London hospital writes to the British Medical Record: "There is no recognized reason why of late years neuralgia of the face and scalp should have increased so much in the female sex as compared with our own. There is no doubt that it is one of the most common of female maladies—one of the most painful and difficult of treatment. It is also a cause of much mental depression, and leads more often to habits of intemperance than any other. This growing prevalence of neuralgia may to some extent be referred to the effects of cold upon the terminal branches of the nerves distributed to the skin; and the reason why men are less subject to it than women may to a great extent, I think, be explained by the much greater protection afforded by the mode in which the former cover their heads when they are in the open air. It may be observed that the surface of the head which is actually covered in man is at least three times that which fashion allows to a woman; indeed the points of contact between the hat or bonnet and the head in the latter are so irregular as practically to destroy any protection which might otherwise be afforded. If I were to report to the journals a case of facial neuralgia cured on the principle of protecting the lateral and frontal surface of the face, as well as the superior part of the scalp, it might excite a certain amount of ridicule. I can assure you, however, that my patient considers that her case ought to be reported; for she says that, if we cannot do much for neuralgia with our prescriptions, we ought to oppose fashion when we find it prejudicial to health and productive of suffering."

THE USEFUL REINDEER.—Lapland nourishes no other domestic animal than the reindeer; but in this creature are to be found many useful qualities. No part of the animal is useless. The Laplanders make use of the hair, the skin, the flesh, the bones, the marrow, the blood and the nerves. The skin serves to protect them from the inclemency of the weather; no other flesh than that of the reindeer is eaten; its bones are of astonishing use, for cross-bows and bows, for pointing their arrows, for making their spades, and for ornaments. Its tongue and the marrow of its bones are their greatest delicacies. They frequently drink the blood, but they generally preserve it in a bladder, which they expose to the cold, and allow it to become dense by freezing; when they wish to eat it they cut off with an ax as much as they desire. They have no other thread than that which they draw from the nerves and sinews of this animal; with the finest they sew their clothes, and with the coarsest they sew the bark of their huts, sledges and cradles. The milk of the reindeer is the only beverage the Laplanders possess; and because it is extremely fat and thick they mix it with nearly an equal quantity of water; they only draw a gallon of milk daily from the best reindeer, which give no milk except when they have a young one. Very nutritious cheeses are made from this milk; and the poorer classes, who cannot afford to kill a deer for its flesh, live on nothing else than milk and cheese. The cheeses are fat, and have a strong smell; but, being made and eaten without salt, they are quite tasteless.—Home and School.

It is a strange word for a heathen to say that the day of death we fear so is the birthday of eternity. Thus it is indeed to those who are here born again; this new birth of grace is the sure earnest and pledge of that birthday of glory. Why do we not then labor to make this certain by the former? Is it not a fearful thing to spend our days in vanity, and then lie down in darkness and sorrow forever; to disregard the life of our soul, while we may and should be provident for it; and then, when it is going out, cry: Whither art thou going, O my soul?—Leighton.

There are very few rich dentists. They all live a sort of hand-to-mouth life.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Congregation of Rites, at the Pope's elbow, has decided that Joan of Arc be not recommended for the honors of sainthship.

—Mr. Bruce's school at Julfa, Persia, has been closed by the Persian authorities at the instance of the Romanists and Armenians.

—The revival in Dublin, following the labors of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, is still going on with great power. At a converts' meeting, lately held, two or three thousand persons were in attendance. Sabbath services are crowded.

—It is announced that the American Baptist Missionary Union closes its fiscal year with an excess of receipts over last year of $4,026. The total receipts for the year have been $245,997; expenditures, $223,179; leaving a balance in the treasury of $22,820.

—The first church in Charlestown, Mass., organized in 1632, is the oldest orthodox Congregational church in the country. Lately the Rev. Henry L. Kendall was installed the new pastor. He stood—on his feet—an examination of two hours and a half on his doctrinal soundness.

—The American Bible Society is making arrangements for a full exhibition of Bibles of all editions and languages. The British and Foreign Bible Society will unite with their American co-worker; and it is estimated that two hundred versions of the Bible in various languages and dialects will be on exhibition.

—Miss Baxter, of Dundee, has given $1,000 to the London Society, toward the purchase of a suitable building at Amoy, China, for the training of native ministers and schoolmasters. In view of the general intelligence of the Chinese, and the great respect for learning which their system of government inspires, the London society is desirous of giving the native ministers a better education than has hitherto been the case.

—The North India Bible Society report an increase of more than 50 per cent. in their sales this year over last. The number of copies of Scripture circulated in 1875 was 36,870; of the Urdu Scriptures, 18,330; of the Hindi, 15,622. The subscriptions were Rs. 2,820; the sales at depot, Rs. 3,771; the colportage sales, Rs. 1,262. The committee are bringing out an edition of 3,000 copies of the Gospel of John in Urdu-Persian, in large type, for the use of those who are under instruction in zenanas.

—The most flourishing station of the Niger mission, West Africa, under the charge of Bishop Crowther, is Brass, at the mouth of the river. At this place the Christians have endured bitter persecution, but have more than held their ground. The new church, toward which the people had given £1,000 in money or kind, was opened last year. Fifteen persons were baptized on the day of dedication, making forty-seven for the year. Others are coming forward. Among those who were received was a chief, by whose side sat his most bitter persecutor, in former years, apparently a converted man.

—The Advance says: "The American Home Missionary Society (Congregational) closes its financial year not only, as its traditional policy compels, out of debt, but with receipts $11,000 higher than last year. It received $11,000 more last year than during any year previous. In view of the 'hard times,' and some distracting things in the denomination, this affords renewed ground of confidence in its wise administration, as well as reason for special thanks to almighty God. Its treasury has been repeatedly relieved from the most unexpected quarters, and its work therefore prosecuted without embarrassment. The $30,000 which has flowed, by this channel, to those who were destitute of the gospel has come through unlooked-for legacies, as well as the offerings of thousands who were less able to give this year than before. The whole constitutes a precious trust, bestowed by the great Giver in answer to prayer. It teaches us American Congregationalists, with peculiar emphasis, lessons of courage, faith and hopefulness. It will be necessary for many persons, in the year to come, out of smaller pecuniary income probably, to make a larger consecration, in order to meet the increasing demands for the work of the coming kingdom."

—A letter from Alexandria in the Press says that never has a pilgrimage to Mecca and Medina been so numerously attended as the one which was concluded at the beginning of the present year. There is now at Mecca a celebrated preacher whose reputation has extended through the whole of Arabia. He is regarded as a saint and a prophet, and people from Turkey, Northern Africa, the Soudan, Arabia and India assembled in crowds to listen to him. Among the pilgrims were several princes, such as the uncle of the Shah of Persia, and some Arabian and African Sultans. All strictly fulfilled the rules observed by the pilgrims, and even the Shah's uncle, who is a man advanced in years, entered Mecca with only a cloth round his loins. An old man of seventy, feeling his end approaching, traveled all the way from Karrachee to hear the celebrated preacher, and died at Mecca shortly after his arrival. The correspondent also describes some sermons which were addressed to the assembled pilgrims, apparently with considerable effect. In one the preacher urged his hearers to have as little intercourse as possible with Christians, and to abstain entirely from drinking wine; and his words produced so much remorse in some of the pilgrims that as he rode away they threw themselves under the horse's hoofs. Another "salut" predicted that within the next ten years the whole of "Franglistan" (Europe) would be under the rule of the crescent, that the Sultan of Constantinople would conquer the eastern portion of the continent, including "Rmul-el-Kubrijeh" (Rome the powerful,) and that the Sultan of Morocco would occupy the western portion, with the town of "Tuleitulah" (Toledo.)

Our Young People.

THE CAPTAIN'S DAUGHTER.

BY JAMES T. FIELDS.

We were crowded in the cabin,
Not a soul would dare to sleep;
It was midnight on the waters,
And a storm was on the deep.

'Tis a fearful thing in winter
To be shattered by the blast,
And to hear the rattling trumpet
Thunder: "Cut away the mast!"

So we shuddered there in silence,
For the stoutest held his breath
While the hungry sea was roaring,
And the breakers talked with Death.

As thus we sat in darkness,
Each one busy with his prayers,
"We are lost!" the captain shouted,
As he staggered down the stairs.

But his little daughter whispered,
As she took his icy hand,
"Isn't God upon the ocean
Just the same as on the land?"

Then we kissed the little maiden,
And we spoke in better cheer,
And we anchored safe in harbor,
When the morning was shining clear.

From Our Little Friends.

RUTLEDGE, Crenshaw Co., Ala.

MR. EDITOR: We live in the pine woods, a long distance from the railroad; but we enjoy a great many blessings. We have a good teacher—Mr. E. Y. McMorries—and a good pastor—Mr. A. M. Innes—whom we like very much. Our Sunday school is not very largely attended. The little boys and girls write you about so many good Sabbath schools at other places that it makes me wish ours could be as good and prosperous as theirs. I have been a member of the Sabbath school six years; am a member of the Methodist Church; joined when I was ten years old—am now eleven. I like the stories which you send us in the ADVOCATE, and also the letters you receive from your little friends. When you hear from me again I hope our Sunday school will be in a more flourishing condition.

Your true friend,

GLENNIE OSBORNE.

Timidity of Orators.

Orators are peculiarly liable to that momentary sensation which Collins, in his "Ode to the Passions," has graphically described:

"First fear his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewildered laid;
And back recoiled, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made."

As a rule, orators manifest a painful anxiety about their speeches. They are uneasy and nervous, as if anticipating failure. This is due to the very sensitive organization which makes them orators.

"Why! how nervous you are!" said a friend, on taking Canning's hand just before he rose to speak.

"Am I?" was the prime minister's reply. "Then I shall make a good speech."

Daniel Webster, on the other hand, was cool, calm, collected. His nerves were of iron. Everything had been thought out before he rose to speak. On the morning he was to reply to Hayne a group of anxious Yankees met him as he entered the capitol.

"Mr. Webster," said a friend, nervously grasping him by the arm, "Mr. Webster, are you ready?"

The great man, bringing his open right hand vertically down into the palm of the left, quietly said:

"I have got four fingers in."

"Four fingers" was, among sportsmen, the mark of an unusually heavy charge for a gun. Mr. Hayne found out how heavy the load was.

A junior counsel once congratulated Sir William Follet on his perfect composure in the prospect of a great case he was about to try. Sir William merely asked his friend to feel his hand, which was wet from the nervousness of anxiety.

This nervousness and anxiety seems a condition of oratorical success. The late Lord Derby, "the Rupert of debate," as he was named by his admirers, said that his principal speeches cost him two sleepless nights—one in which he was thinking what to say, the other in which he was lamenting what he might have said better. Cicero, according to Plutarch, not only wanted courage in arms, but in his speaking also. He began timidly, and in many cases he scarcely left off trembling and shaking, even when he got thoroughly into the current and substance of his speech.

My Stars!

Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
How I wonder what you are.

Right over there, to-night, above the southern horizon, a triangle of three bright stars shines like diamonds in the sky. That brightest one is Sirius. It was the watch-dog of the Nile. It rose when the great Nile flood rose every year. As they had fever then, they thought the Dog-Star Sirius warned them of fevers. And some people here believe the rising of the Dog Star—dog-days are fever days.

How brilliant it is! Wonder how far off it is! Let's see; how shall we come at it? The tailor measures by the yard; but the yard-measure won't do. Railroads measure by the mile. Well, that only do to start on. Let's get a few distances. From New York to Chicago is, say 1,000 miles, to Denver, Col., 2,000 miles, to San Francisco 3,000 miles. A pretty broad country, that.

But this will hardly do for the stars. It may do for the star worlds that belong to our sun. The moon is 240,000 miles off. About 500 times as far—say 100,000,000 miles—and we come to the sun. It is a little less, but that will do—100,000,000 miles to the sun.

Now that bright blue star, Sirius, that looks so little beside our sun, is over 100,000,000 times as far from us as the sun—that is, 100,000,000 times 1½ million miles, or about 100,000,000,000,000 miles. That's a good ways off, and a good many figures.

But 100,000,000,000 don't get much knowledge into our heads. Let's try another way. The cars run about 30 miles an hour. To get to the moon on the cars would take 333 days—say one year. To get to the sun we would have to go, if we lived long enough, about 378 years. And now for a long trip. If we could ride to Sirius on the cars, at the rate of 30 miles an hour, we should get there in about 378,000,000 years, allowing for no way stations at the moon and the sun. But that's a little more than time most of us can spare for a pleasure trip.

Let's try another plan to find out how far off Sirius is. If we can't go, may be we can see. Light travels faster than the cars. Light goes at the rate of 181,000 miles a second. In about eight and one-half minutes the first ray of light reaches us from the sun, after he rises in the morning. Now, although that is traveling pretty fast, yet it would take a ray of light, starting from Sirius, 23 years to reach us here; it will take the Sirians 23 years waiting to see the glories of our one hundredth liberty year, and the splendid show of the Centennial at Philadelphia, the gathering of the fruits of the great republic, and the gathering of the fruits of the nations of the earth will not dazzle their eyes till about the year 1999. If Sirius were blotted out to-day, yet for 23 years its splendor would gem the southern sky, and only when 23 years had gone by would we know the dire catastrophe by a dark space eclipsing the brilliant star. What a great blazing sun it is, pouring out its white heat way into the untraveled immensity!

We think some people and some things big in this world of ours. But when we look at this mighty sun, mightier than 2,000 of our suns, and then remember that the eye can see 6,000 of them in the sparkling sky, and that the glass can see 20,000,000 of them, some of them smaller, but many of them far mightier than this glorious Sirius, we begin to feel our own dimension; and, though we can never take its measure, yet we can look with awe and reverence on the mighty universe of God.—Rev. J. P. Safford, in the Interior.

What is for Jesus' Sake?

Willie joined the infant class. There were twenty-three little boys and girls in it. And what a nice teacher they had! She was so good, and loved them so much. Willie was a little bashful at first, but he soon got over it.

When his teacher asked him if he knew a verse he stood up just as the others had done; and, though he trembled a little, he said it so that they all could hear him. This is the verse:

"Jesus loves me: this I know;
For the Bible tells me so.
Little ones to him belong;
They are weak, but he is strong."

A few weeks after this, when Willie had gone to bed, and said his "Now I lay me down to sleep," ending with the line, "And this I beg, for Jesus' sake," he asked his mother:

"What is for Jesus' sake?"

His mother said: "Suppose I should ask papa to do something for your sake; what would I mean?"

"Would it be to do it to please me?"

"Yes. Papa loves you, and loves to make you happy; and even things that he likes to do he likes better to do when he knows you will be happy. If I ask papa to do something for me he loves to do it; but I can see how his face brightens if I say it will please Willie too."

"Yes, mamma."

"Now God loves you, and loves to do you good. He loves Jesus, who spent his life in trying to make everybody know about him, and was crucified that he might draw people to him, and save them from doing wrong, and being unhappy. Jesus loves you now just as he loved the little children when he was on the earth, and loves to have the heavenly Father bless you; and the heavenly Father loves to bless you, and loves to bless you, too, for dear Jesus' sake."—The Day Spring.

"COME AND SEE ME."—Never take "Come and see me" as a phrase meant in earnest unless it is accompanied with a date. Such an invitation amounts to nothing at all. If a lady or gentleman desires your company he or she will appoint a time for your visit.

"Call on me when you can make it convenient," "Drop in as you are passing," "Make us a visit whenever you have an hour or two to spare," are social ambiguities by which men and women of the world understand that they are not expected to do the thing requested. When people wish to be cheaply polite there is nothing like this kind of vagueness. The complimentary small change of society must always be taken at a large discount. It is never worth its face or anything like it. Yet it is a convenient medium of exchange, and heavy debts of gratitude that ought to be requited in better coin are often paid with it. People who have more polish than principle use it lavishly—plain, blunt, honest men, sparingly or not at all. Whoever makes a friendly visit to a fashionable house on the strength of a mere "Come and see me" will very often find that the family circle he has dropped into by request is as incongenial as the Arctic circle, and he will probably leave it with a chilly feeling that will prevent him from venturing into the same high latitude again. But when a wholesouled man, whom you know to be your friend, grasps you vigorously by the hand, and says, "Come and dine with me to-day—dinner on the table at five o'clock—be sure to come—we shall expect you," you can take it as certain that your presence is warmly desired. It is pleasant always to make or receive a visit from a friend, but a nod on the street is all-sufficient from a fashionable acquaintance.

It is the wife who has the making of a man's home, says an exchange. True, and now and then she makes his wig warm too.—New York Commercial.

Rambling.

—The camp meeting season is upon us, and there are many announced. It is a good plan for every district to have its camp meeting ground centrally located, and arrangements looking to permanence. They should be, as far as possible, on or near the great railroad thoroughfares, so that people can reach them easily and cheaply.

The Seashore camp meeting opens July 19. The place of breezes and salt water, healing springs and boundless contiguity of shade. Camp grounds, like colleges and other institutions, gain by age. The people blessed and converted there are apt to return, bringing their friends with them. This will be the fifth meeting at the Seashore, and we expect it will be more largely attended than ever.

The Summit district camp meeting will be held in connection with the District Conference at Magnolia, Miss., July 26. This is a fine location, and the presiding elder, Bro. Godfrey, assures us that everything will be in order for the entertainment of the people.

Crystal Springs camp-meeting will open August 2. This is one of the best improved camp grounds in the South. The managers are men of business, and all the details are perfectly organized. It is said to be the model camp meeting for the excellence of its improvements, and for the completeness of its provisions for the comfort of visitors.

There are other important camp meetings announced, but we mention these three as following each other in close order, and as specially accessible to many of our readers.

It is usual for editors to tell how camp meetings should be conducted, but those who have them in charge know their own business. We take it for granted there will be no fine preaching, and that if there be any great preachers present they will consent to become fools for Christ's sake. Saints are to be built up and revived, missions and Sunday schools may be mentioned with propriety, and one or two collections would not hurt; but the main thing is the conversion of sinners. To this end all others should be adjusted, and to it the gathered forces of the occasion should be directed. The number of conversions does by no means exhibit all the good done, but it is the most prominent and appreciable indication.

The two great political parties have now adopted their platforms, and nominated their candidates. As to the platforms, both parties seem to occupy nearly the same ground on the financial question, and on other subjects both propose to do right. The candidates of both parties are pure and good men. This is something of moment in these times. The people know what the Republican administration is and has been, and they may conjecture what the Democratic will be. Every intelligent and conscientious man will give the matter due consideration, and cast his vote in the fear of God. It is rumored that Grant will employ the military freely in the Southern States, and that bayonet rule will be again resorted to. It may be so, and our people must be as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves. Yet the power of the Grant administration will be exerted for the success of the party with which it is identified. It will probably be most unlawfully, unscrupulously and brutally exerted. It is right, and necessary to their prosperity, that the Southern States should be under the control of their own people. Unprincipled adventurers, in corrupt coalition with misled negroes, have nearly ruined us. The intelligent taxpayers of the country ought to have a voice in our local governments. We say to our readers: Do not leave everything to the mere politicians, but see that good men are nominated, and vote for them. We want honest and capable men—men of sobriety and good report—in office, and deliverance from the vampires and harpies that have well-nigh destroyed us.

—As the glorious Fourth is now past, we are fairly launched for another centennial voyage. It is pleasant to think that all the political rascals of this period will be dead when the next hundred years are past, but perhaps as bad a set will flourish then. Grantism, by that time, may have grown into a despotism as absolute in name as the present is in fact, and the whisky rings, with no Bristow to prosecute them, may be the power behind the throne.

But we hope for better things, though we thus speak. The negroes and Indians and the Chinese will be disposed of for better or worse, and the Confederate war will be remembered as an episode in our history—brilliant for the valor displayed, and notable as resulting in a radical revolution in the national government. Another hundred years of conflict with evil may bring about a purer society, the general triumph of the gospel, and witness the extinction of sectional asperities.

The old bell of liberty that pealed so joyously when the Declaration was adopted was cracked and useless when the centennial Fourth came. It was meet, for "how shall we sing the Lord's songs in a strange land?" We hope the old bell may somehow recover its tone, and be so mended up that it shall, a hundred years hence, sound out the old tocsin of freedom. We believe the only way to mend a cracked bell is to cast it over again. The bells that vibrated and thrilled in 1776 would be out of place now, but their time may come again.

—As beseemeth this hot weather, there are no exciting ecclesiastical questions up for the editors to write about. What could we do with such questions up here in the third story, the mercury in the nineties, and with no outward view but brick walls, which fairly shimmer in the noonday sun? The fraternal commissioners meet in August at Cape May. They have had an eye to their personal comfort, and perhaps also to the success of their mission. With due attention to sea-bathing they may keep clean and cool, and the good fare and breezes will tend to tranquilize and harmonize the mind. Thus may they settle all matters of dispute, and promote brotherly love. Meantime let those who have grievances to be redressed and disputes to be adjusted send on the documents, so that the brethren may have something what to say and do when they get together.

—Our institutions of learning are now before the people. About the last of the commencements end this week, and students and professors have a vacation. We have heard of nothing but good reports from any of our schools and colleges, and we never do. All graduates acquit themselves well, the addresses and sermons are always of the best, and the attendance uniformly large, intelligent, respectable. The life-work of the young graduates is now before them. It is natural for them to tell of their alma mater, often to revert to their college days, and not to conceal the fact that they are regular graduates. But they must let their light shine in noble actions and in worth of character.

We note that many who have been the greatest benefactors of institutions of learning were not graduates. Rich, Vanderbilt, Cornell, and others that we might name, were not trained in college halls. The alumni are watched, and by their fruits will our colleges be judged. They are the living epistles, or dead. Our sympathies are with the boards of trustees how to provide ways and means for our schools in the impoverished South. And yet we shall grow steadily poorer and worse every way if we fall. As there is but one Vanderbilt, we must look to ourselves.

Letter from Philadelphia.

MR. EDITOR: My congregation having kindly voted me a leave of absence, and furnished the "sinews of war" for a trip to the Centennial, I left Jackson, Miss., on the morning of June 20, and found my way to this great historic city. For speed and safety I cheerfully commend the route by way of Milan and Cincinnati. We reached Washington in two days and five hours, without let or hindrance, save the intense heat and excessive dust. Two days I lingered at our national capital, employing the time very profitably and pleasantly. Having never seen the great capitol building, nor looked upon a Congress in session, of course my steps were directed thither without delay. I chanced to be in the hall when the speaker called the House to order and introduced the chaplain. One thing I observed with pain—our law-makers have very little regard for the great Law-giver, and less interest in his service. As the chaplain appeared at the desk, in his clerical robes, and began to read the morning prayers, possibly a half dozen stood up, as many more bowed their heads, and the rest either sat in indifferent silence or engaged in whispering conversation. Here, possibly, has been the secret of misrule and unwise legislation through all the years. Would that our public men had a higher reverence for God, whose servants they are, and whose laws of eternal right they should first obey!

From the lofty dome of the capitol we have a most commanding prospect. The magnificent government buildings tower in the distance from every point of observation. They are worthy the wealth and splendor of this great nation. I made a visit to each, and wandered wonderingly through their spacious apartments. A description I will not attempt. Among other places of interest which the Southern visitor should honor is Arlington, the historic home of the late Gen. Robert E. Lee. It is situated on Arlington Heights, and from the opposite bank of the Potomac grandly overlooks the city. The house is kept just as it was left by the family, except the library, which contains the desks and other office furniture of the superintendent of the national cemetery. The floors and walls are perfectly bare, without carpet to dull the hollow echo of footfall, or picture to relieve the sense of sad desertion. In the old spacious parlor there remain the narrow white marble mantlepieces, with the curious carvings. The green-house is kept in repair, and flowers growing to adorn the graves of sleeping soldiers. A feeling of peculiar sadness overwhelmed me as I walked through this now lonely but once delightful home of a noble family. I could scarcely repress a rising tear. In it the grand Southern chieftain was not permitted to die. Mrs. Lee visited Arlington but once after the war, and then only to get some remaining household furniture. From this their rightful home his children are driven by the strong arm of federal power. But a day of right-doing will yet come, and with it the heirs of Robert E. Lee will kiss the soil of historic old Arlington and again call it home.

To be in time to witness the Fourth of July Centennial festivities, and be in advance of the crowd, I hastened to Philadelphia. Of the exposition I may write next week. On Sunday morning Rev. H. F. Johnson, of Brookhaven, and myself attended a centennial service, at nine o'clock, in the Arch Street church, Dr. Hatfield, pastor. Short voluntary addresses were made by the promiscuous congregation. They had a decidedly political tone, and were no mean efforts at successful stump-speaking. That proper reference should be made to our national history was expected; but I was not prepared for such a service. One brother said: "We have a great deal to thank God for to day as individuals and as a nation. If for nothing else we should ever thank him for raising up that modern Moses, Abraham Lincoln," etc. Another was convinced that God controlled in the affairs of men far more than we think. "For instance," said he, "it was very strange that the candidate nominated at Cincinnati was not the one the country expected, and I believe the Lord has overruled to put forth the right man." Another brother seconded warmly the remarks of the last speaker with reference to the Cincinnati nomination; and thus on to the close. At ten and a half we were at Trinity, and heard a sermon from Bishop Gilbert Haven. He had a good subject, and, bating some objectionable passages thrown in by way of illustration, he preached a fine sermon. He is a man of distinguished talents, enlarged culture and personal magnetism. But for his negro-mania his influence would be wholesome and widespread. This, however, he cannot restrain. In this sermon he paid a glowing tribute to John Brown and his holy martyrdom. He said: "When governors and presidents shall pass away, and Jerome and John Huss shall be forgotten, he will be known and honored as the sinless criminal." At night he preached on "God's Purpose in America," and indulged to fullness his gushing African fanaticism. He honored the government for striking the irons from the enslaved, but charged it with wickedness for delaying and hesitating before the black man was fully and permanently established in all his rights as a free and equal citizen. "Because of this timid policy," he said, "hundreds have been brutally shot and tens of thousands have been driven from the polls." I give these few morsels to let you know on what spiritual pabulum the Bishop feeds his Northern audiences. Many things said of him in the newspapers I never credited, but now am prepared to believe the worst when quoted on this subject. In the afternoon I attended a communion service in another church, and was treated with Methodist cordiality. Philadelphia, I am sure, has less consideration and sympathy for the South than any city in the North. May be when I know them better we will love each other more.

PHILADELPHIA, July 3, 1876.

Castelar on Toleration.

The article on religious toleration, in the new Spanish constitution, has passed both houses of the national legislature. In its discussion before the Cortes a brilliant assembly, composed of, "the statesmen of every shade of political feeling, the whole diplomatic bodies, the lady of fashion and the passing stranger," was electrified and enthralled by the eloquence of the noble advocate of religious liberty, Senor Castelar. One account says: "The whole speech was delivered without hesitation; it was replete with historical erudition and glowing wit and tender pathos; the rich, musical tones of the orator ran through every niche and corner of the Congress; bursts of suppressed applause followed at the conclusion of each separate division of the subject." We make a brief extract from his brilliant and weighty speech:

"From the day when the elements of human matter rose up from confusion of chaos, uprose with them spirit and heart and conscience. That spirit you cannot curb, that conscience you cannot bind by any human law of coercion. Try it. It has been tried; it has ever failed; it ever will fail. And why? Because it is against the will of the great Creator of the universe. The State has ever—in the pages of divine or human history go and seek it—sought to bind down the conscience of men. Pharaoh, who represented the State, sought to force his own form of worship upon Moses and the Jews; Pilate, the State representative, though seeking to do this, wetted his hands in the blood of the spotless One. Nero, the Cossac's of the Don, King Henry the Eighth and his harlot Parliament, Charles the Fourth—all these, powers of the State, committed a like fatal error; and how do their names sound to our ears? No, brother deputies, you cannot do it. The State and the conscience are two great powers, but they are separate entities, and each has its own work in the universe; the State is the representative of authority to enforce what is morally and legally clearly right; but the conscience has a higher, finer, keener task to perform.

"I see honored statesmen round me who wish to bind the conscience of their subjects by the power and force of the State. What, brother deputies, if the State tells you what is the true, what the false religion, would you believe it? If you do, if you will vote for a religious unity of coercion, why you are voting that the power of human law shall be paramount and tyrannize over the divine and moral powers of the human soul. Conscience is unconcealable, is inviolate; you may persuade, but never can you coerce it by force. No, deputies, you know you cannot. You can move it by inspiring it with a new idea; you cannot move it by a mandate. The persecutor gets his way outwardly, but he does not in reality. Outward obedience and assent is all he can obtain; and is such a victory to be called a triumph?

"Sirs, I charge no one with desiring to bring back the cursed age of torments, the horrors of the Inquisition, the street and altar smeared with innocent blood. Nay; but, sirs, I charge you with trying to coerce men to be hypocrites and liars from fear—fear lest their children should be illegitimate, fear lest their rights of citizenship be taken from them, fear lest when dead their bones should rot on some dung hill, or in the Campo. You say: 'The State undertakes to support the Roman Catholic religion and its ministers.' Well, I give that creed its due honor; I own its beauty, and its force, and its antiquity. And you say: 'This is the true religion.' Sirs, are you so gross as to say, 'This is the true,' because it is imposed by human law and force of arms? Nay, you will surely say: 'This is true because, and only because, it recommends itself to your heart and conscience as the true one; and, if so, why do you want a human law to force you to follow that which your conscience tells you is true?' Are you afraid of a rival? Sirs, you do an honor to Protestantism if you think it so true as to be able, in a fair race, to outrun Roman Catholicism. But if it be not true, this religion of the State—if it be not true, brother deputies, what then? Magna est veritas et prævalebit. If the Roman Catholic creed be true, it will prevail by force of truth; if Protestantism be true, it will prevail, and you cannot crush it. If this liberty of conscience be of God, you cannot, if of man, you need not, crush it."

The Summit District Conference and camp meeting begins at Magnolia, Miss., July 26. For particulars see the notice on our eighth page.

Death of Bishop Cummins.

The community, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, will learn with mingled feelings of surprise and regret of the sudden death of the Right Rev. George D. Cummins, senior Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, which occurred very unexpectedly at his residence in Lutherville, Baltimore county, on Monday afternoon, the twenty-sixth of June. He had been in the enjoyment of excellent health until a few days ago, and only on Sunday, the eighteenth of June, he preached at morning and evening services at Bethany Independent church, Franklin square. A heavy rain storm prevailed on the day in question, and before reaching his home after the evening service Bishop Cummins contracted a very severe cold, which was succeeded by inflammation of the bowels, causing his death. The deceased was in the fifty-fourth year of his age, and was widely known throughout the country as the leading representative of that disaffection in the Protestant Episcopal Church which, a few years ago, assumed positive form, and organized what is known as the Reformed Episcopal Church in the United States. The Baltimore Bee says:

"Bishop Cummins was born in the State of Delaware, in December, 1822, and was therefore in his fifty-fourth year. He came of Methodist parentage, and all his early years were under the control of Methodist training. He graduated at Dickinson College in 1841, was ordained a deacon in 1845, and a priest in 1847. Among other parishes, he was rector of St. Peter's church in this city, and was a great co-worker with the Rev. H. V. Johns, rector of Christ Protestant Episcopal Church, from whom he imbibed many of the views of church polity and form of worship that governed his after life. The ritualistic party of the Protestant Episcopal Church, fearing his large and rapidly increasing influence, aided in a project that in 1866 elevated him to the episcopate as assistant Bishop of Kentucky, but his restless spirit and desire for reform in the conduct of the church would not permit this remaining quiet, and the result was some serious agitation on important questions between himself and his superiors, which finally resulted in his being deposed and withdrawing from the church. The movement, which resulted in the establishment of the Reformed Episcopal Church, was begun in the latter part of 1872, but in the death of its head it receives a blow which many will deem serious.

Of What Church?

The New York Christian Advocate says:

A friend has just shown us a private letter received last week from Gov. Hayes' pastor (one of our preachers of the Central Ohio Conference,) from which we quote the following:

"The Governor is not a member of the church, though he hardly lacks anything more than having his name on the church record. He is a regular member of my congregation, and chairman of my board of trustees; and, privately, I may tell you that, he comes so near being a Christian that he conducts worship in his family. Mrs Hayes is an earnest member of the church."

As to Mr. Wheeler, the nominee for Vice President, two different statements have appeared as to his church relationship, one stating that he is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, the other that he is a deacon in the Congregational Church. Both describe him as a man of firm religious convictions and habits—a fact of no small moment to all the Christian people of this great country. Now let us hear from St. Louis!

President Grant is so near the kingdom that he has a Methodist wife, and this is about all that can be said for him religiously. Gov. Hayes has a wife who is an earnest member of the Methodist Church, and, although not a member himself, he is so nearly a Christian that he holds family prayer. Mr. Wheeler is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, or a deacon in the Congregational Church. Our Northern Methodist brethren never forgot that Grant was a brother-in-law, though somewhat loose in some of his ways, but they have a still better thing in Hayes, who has a pious Methodist wife, and is himself almost a Christian.

Gov. Tilden is so unfortunate as to have no wife, but is said to be piously disposed notwithstanding. He is a Presbyterian in faith, and owns and regularly occupies a pew in that church. Gov. Hendricks is reported to be a member of the Episcopal Church. We should judge the tickets to be about evenly balanced religiously, and our votes must be determined by other considerations. Knowing, however, what the Methodist administration has been for the past eight years, we are willing to try a Presbyterian for awhile.

Rev. A. J. Briggs, writing from Mount Zion church, Perry county, Ala., June 28, gives us the following sad news:

This community is in the midst of great sorrow, occasioned by the death of Daniel S. Christenberry, an official member of our church, on Sunday last. He was beloved by all who knew him, and was an Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.—The Bishop, says the Pacific Methodist of June 23, preached his farewell sermon to a large congregation in St. Paul's church on Sunday last. On Monday morning he and Mrs. Kavanaugh took passage overland for Kentucky. We wish them a safe and pleasant trip home.

On This Picture, and Then on This.

The following extract is from a venerable and venerated document written by Thomas Jefferson, and adopted by the Continental Congress on July 4, 1776. Our Southern people, especially the citizens of Louisiana, will be surprised to find the wrongs which they have recently endured stated with so much force and accuracy. Many of the counts and specifications sound as if they were drawn up to-day, and meant for somebody other than King George. Let us read reverently:

He has made judges dependent on his will alone for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, standing armies, without the consent of our legislatures.

He has affected to render the military independent of and superior to the civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution; and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation:

For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us;

For protecting them, by a mock trial, from punishment, for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of these States;

For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world;

For imposing taxes on us without our consent;

For depriving us, in many cases, of the benefits of trial by jury;

For transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offenses;

For abolishing the free system of English laws in a neighboring province, establishing therein an arbitrary government, and enlarging its boundaries, so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these colonies;

For taking away our charters, abolishing our most valuable laws, and altering fundamentally the powers of our governments;

For suspending our own legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has excited domestic insurrections among us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions.

In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms; our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury.

Rev. T. B. White, writing from Albany, Ore., June 29, says:

"I have just returned from Corvallis, whither I have been a few days attending commencement and the annual meeting of the board of regents.

"The college is well manned, and has sent out, in the language of the president, the 'best class' that ever passed from its threshhold. There were six graduates—two young ladies.

"We feel proud of our school in Corvallis. The appeals made for noble and honored Centenary, I hope, will meet a liberal response. If we had such buildings as Centenary we would certainly stand in the front of colleges.

"The faculty is able and sound, discipline good, and the status of education required is high. Success to Corvallis College!

"O how hot! While I write the perspiration stands on my brow. Thermometer in the room, eighty-eight degrees. Crops are growing fast; and although the prospect was so gloomy, and the crop put in so late, yet these lands seem to have such power! We are having occasional showers. Notwithstanding the times are so hard, there is light ahead."

We see by the programme of commencement exercises that Bro. White's daughter, Miss Minnie M. White, was one of the graduates. We have no doubt she acquitted herself in a manner to do honor to her native State. We regret to learn that Bro. White's health is not good. May he soon be restored. If he cannot find health in Oregon he will be most cordially welcomed back to our salubrious Louisiana.

The following in the New York Christian Advocate is headed "Interesting Ceremony:"

A private note from Rev. Dr. Newman, of the Metropolitan Methodist church, Washington, bearing date on Friday last, contained, among other items of interest, the following: "I go to baptize Col. Fred. Grant's infant daughter. The President is to stand as godfather, and Mrs. Honore, the maternal grandmother, is to be godmother. The ceremony is to take place at the White House, and the water to be used is from the river Jordan. I brought it over at Mrs. Grant's request."

Very interesting, we should say, if not wonderful—extraordinary. Water all the way from the Jordan, brought by Parson Newman, and by him applied! Then there is to be a godfather and a godmother, and by what ritual is this to be done? This makes an epoch indeed in an eventful if not an illustrious life. "I go to baptize Col. Fred. Grant's infant daughter." Blarney and toady culminated!

Planets govern not the soul nor guide the destinies of men; but trifles lighter than straws are levers in the building up of our character.

Wesleyan Female Institute,

STAUNTON, VA.

WILL begin its twenty-seventh annual session SEPTEMBER 21, 1876. Rev. W. A. HARRIS, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three teachers and officers.

Modern Languages taught and spoken in the college by a European teacher. Music by able professors and teachers, among whom are some of the most cultivated teachers of vocal music in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the Union. Its marked effect is the rapid promotion of the health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come here from the South with feeble constitutions and climatic diseases are generally restored.

Buildings elegant—fanned by purest breezes, commanding the most magnificent scenery, and combining such varied attractions as to make it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

This school is usually attended by pupils from fifteen to seventeen different States.

Great economy and simplicity in dress are required. A simple uniform is worn. No unnecessary expense allowed. Strict economy practiced to limit expenses of pupils.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Va., under the presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions for young ladies in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters there. Its course of study is ample, its Faculty accomplished, and its instruction both solid and elegant. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more eligible, no scenery more magnificent, no atmosphere more salubrious. Not the least of its merits is that sacred regard for religious training, without which no female college especially would be a blessing.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the Church. Instruction is thorough. In music advantages are of real of very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent.

MEDICAL.

IF YOU FEEL DULL, DROWSY, DEBILITATED, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine.

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1872: "I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies." 5p10

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden, and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. No drastic, violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

SHOULD not be regarded as a trifling ailment; in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this complaintless what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

Ask the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine.

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1872: "I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies." 5p10

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

During the last ten years there has been a decided disposition to lay by crops too early. Sambo wants to give them the least amount of labor possible, and landlords are anxious to curtail expenses as much as they can. Whatever the motive, the policy is a bad one. Crops should have undisputed possession of the land until they are fully matured, and whatever work is necessary to secure this should be given them. So far as plowing goes, a corn crop is all the better off for an early "laying by." If clean and well worked up to time of "bunching," for a little hoe work will keep it clean after that; but cotton should be worked just as long as a plow can pass through it without breaking off the limbs.

All upland crops should be "laid by" with the surface of the ground as flat and free from ridges as practicable. Now that manuring and enriching our lands is the order of the day, it is worse than folly to let them wash away. If corn was planted in water furrow, enough dirt will have been thrown to it in previous workings, and no necessity for hilling will exist. Cotton beds, if the crop has been cultivated, after the first or second plowing, with sweeps, will pretty well disappear by August, and, though the surface be clean and loose—conditions favorable to washing—very little will take place. Moreover, this clean, flat surface will be admirably adapted to receive a seeding down of oats in September. To this latter point we beg to call the reader's attention now that he may think about and prepare for it. We have just harvested—as fine a crop of oats as we ever grew, made by sowing the grain in a cotton field in September, and running one furrow of a three-foot harrow in each middle. Just think of the small amount of labor such a crop involves—a hand can sow down and cover some five acres in a day! We will recur to this again, however, next month.

Peas should always be sown broadcast when laying by corn, if not previously planted in the corn. They may take a little food away from the corn, but nothing like what grass would, and for any loss thus produced they return a four-fold equivalent in the food they yield and the enrichment of the land. No opportunity should ever be lost on a farm to get in one of these nitrogen-gathering crops, like peas. Remember that a good supply of available nitrogen is the foundation of a good grain crop.

Go carefully over the cotton fields now and kill all grass; the bunches are large enough now to be easily seen, and later, when the cotton is larger, it will be more difficult to hoe among it. Every year's experience and observation confirm the opinion, heretofore expressed, that by proper care crab grass can be banished from fields where its presence is not desired. If a cotton field is laid by perfectly clean, and grass not allowed to seed in it, little or no grass will appear in it the next year, and in a short time any original stock of grass seed which may have been in the soil will become exhausted. Just think of the diminished labor of making a cotton crop if crab grass was out of the way! Is it not worth an effort to do this? Will not a little additional hoeing now save many-fold in the matter of hoeing another year?

As cotton has now commenced to fruit freely, the workings given it should be at longer intervals, as it is now desirable to check gently the growth of weed and turn the forces of the plant into fruit-making. Rapid growth and fruiting seldom go together. Rapid growth from the time of coming up to the time of blooming, then slowly decreasing growth, finally ceasing about the first of September, are the ideal conditions of a large cotton crop. Of course the seasons have much to do with it, but the farmer can control the matter somewhat by the manner of working the crop.

SWEET POTATOES.

Keep these clear of grass, and see that the vines do not take root in the middles. When this occurs numerous small tubers are formed at the expense of the main crop. If the ground is wet a fair crop may be made by throwing up a bed, opening a furrow on top of it, and laying vines in it, say three or four side by side, and covering them at intervals, leaving spaces some six inches wide uncovered—eighteen inches apart. This may be done, with the early varieties, as late as the twentieth of the month; with ordinary varieties not later than the first week of July.

TURNIPS.

Have land ready to sow rutabagas toward the latter part of this month. Remember that very fine tilth is essential to a turnip crop. The rutabaga is greatly preferable to all other turnips as stock feed, being hardier and more nutritious than other varieties. In this connection we would suggest a trial of the old-fashioned long cabbage as a crop for stock feed, especially milk cows. Plants may be set out as late as the first of August, and on good land will make an immense amount of nutritious food. A similar plant, called cow cabbage, is largely used as cattle food in the Jersey Islands and in Portugal.—Southern Cultivator.

CABBAGE.—Many persons complain that they cannot have any luck with cabbage—it will not head for them. The cabbage is just as easily grown as any other plant if its natural wants are met in the surrounding conditions. These, although not many nor difficult to meet, are imperative, and must be met if success is to be secured. A little study of its nature will give some insight into the character of these wants.

The cabbage is a biennial plant, and all efforts during its first year's growth are directed toward laying up its stalk and thick stems and leaves, as large an amount of plant food as possible, to be drawn upon for the production of seed during the second year. As the formation of good heads requires a rapid growth, the first necessary condition is a very rich soil. It is very difficult, if not impossible, to have soil too rich for cabbage, provided it is thoroughly rotted. And it is next to impossible to secure satisfactory results without a rich soil.

This plant is a native of the sea coast of Europe, and grows in a moist soil and atmosphere. From this it would seem that the nearer these conditions can be met the better. Where it can be secured a moist but not wet soil should be selected. But one of the most essential conditions of the success in cabbage-raising is frequent and thorough cultivation. Without this success can seldom be achieved; with it, fair success may be had even when other things are not very propitious. It is hard to overdo in this matter. Cabbage should be thoroughly cultivated with plow or hoe at least twice each week. This frequent stirring of the soil keeps it constantly in a porous and moist condition, that the demands of this succulent growing plant are fully met. No one should attempt to raise this plant for profit who is not willing to give thorough culture.—L. J. T., in Southern Agriculturist.

ORANGE MARMALADE.—Cut Florida oranges into quarters, and then take out the seeds, and cut the pieces into thin slices with a sharp knife. To every pound add one quart of cold water, and let the whole stand in a large bowl for twenty-four hours. Boil until the slips of peel are very tender, which will take about three hours of slow cooking. Let it stand in the porcelain kettle until next day; then weigh it, and to every pound of peel and juice add one and a half pounds of lump sugar. Boil the whole until the syrup jellies, and the bits of peel are transparent, which will take an hour's slow boiling. Turn out into jars or tumblers. This marmalade will last for years, and is delicious for breakfast as well as tea.—Daisy Eyebright, in Country Gentleman.

State Superintendent of Public Education for Louisiana.

CARD.

THE UNDERSIGNED, who was honored by the suffrages of a large majority of the legal electors in the general state election of 1872, is a CANDIDATE FOR RE-ELECTION as State Superintendent, at the similar election to be held in November, 1876. He respectfully solicits the moral influence and voluntary support of all honorable citizens of the State who are in favor of:

1. Reform and economy in the administration of the public school system.

2. A vigilant protection of the school funds from waste or embezzlement.

3. Equal facilities for the moral and mental instruction of all children in the State, by upright and competent teachers, under the guidance of directors who shall be responsible to the communities in whose behalf they act.

4. Schools, when and where feasible, for the training of the youth, of proper age, in a practical knowledge of the useful arts and trades; and

5. The prompt and punctual payment of teachers' salaries, and of all other legal and indispensable obligations of school directors.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful remedy, which, by well-established virtue and its high reputation in all diseases of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Throat, is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage that it needs no superlatives. Childs late day, in dwelling at length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Lungs, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all pulmonary disorders, such as Rheumatism, Dysentery or Dysentery and, Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, if not at proper cure, so often degenerate into Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on consumption, it has been found most effectual in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, as a truly extraordinary medicine has, after thousands of the most severe nature, the desired effect, that, owing to its agreeable flavor, all can administered without the least difficulty to children; it requires no particular diet. It is also the best, not only because the bottles contain no more than any other, but owing to its peculiar action this Syrup will keep for years without losing, and it can be used in families where only occasionally by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Syrup. Grown persons can take a tea-spoonful to a wine-glass full three or four times a day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night should take two tablespoonfuls of the Syrup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old can take from one to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three or four hours. For sale by

A. CARROLL,
Agent for New Orleans, 39 Chartres street.

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER!

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turner's Hair Tint

HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the indorsement of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind.

No washing or preparation of the hair necessary before using.

It is free from all deleterious ingredients, such as Lead, Sulphur or other Coloring Matter which are injurious to the Hair or Poisonous by Absorption.

And its use saves both time and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb, once a month or oftener, to the Hair or Whiskers, answers the purpose, and not only restores gray hair to its original color, but by stimulating the roots or glands, promotes a new growth, thereby causing hair to grow upon bald heads, where the glands are not entirely destroyed. It is a great promoter of the hair, producing any desired shade from light brown to the deepest black and is the only preparation in existence that will produce these results without staining the skin, which all other Hair Dyes do. The Magic Comb, when applied to a single hair or hairs that have become gray, will restore them to their original shade without staining all over the head, as is necessary in using other Hair Dyes.

Sample box sent free by mail to any address in the United States upon receipt of price, 50c. Sold by the Inventor and proprietor,

JAMES TURNER, Chemist,
P. O. Box 231, New Orleans.

Wholesale Agents—L. L. Lyons, New Orleans; Wheelock, Finley & Co., New Orleans and for sale by Fox & Co., New Orleans and our sale by druggists everywhere.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GAS AT LIVING PRICES.

Hyam's Celebrated Portable Gas Works,

FOR LIGHTING HOTELS, PRIVATE RESIDENCES, CHURCHES, SUGAR-HOUSES, FACTORIES, MILLS, etc., with a brilliant and powerful Gas equal in every respect, if not superior, to Coal Gas, at One-Third the Cost.

THE WORKS are so very simple as to be almost beyond description, being nothing more than the well-known Gas Meter that has been in use Sixty Years.

There are at present, in the different sections of the country, over Four Thousand dwellings, churches, halls, mills, factories, hotels, and public and private institutions of all descriptions, Using this Quality of Gas in preference to that of Coal Gas, owing to its richness, purity, and the soft and pleasing light given by it. Also from an economical and hygienic point of view—we use no Dryers, Pumps or Blowers to corrode or get out of order, and dispense entirely with the use of any and all injurious and dangerous substances or elements, such as Fire, Water or Acid. Our Works are as Compact, Simple of Construction, Safe and Reliable as science and mechanism, coupled with an experience of over thirty years in the gas meter and gas-making business, could suggest, derive or produce, and think we have at last gained the Acme of Perfection, both in illuminating gas and simplicity of manufacture. The Works occupy but very little more space than a gas meter, and require no more attention than an eight-day clock, making Every Man His Own Gas-Maker, placing him entirely independent of any and all Gas Companies. The Works can be placed on or removed from any premises much more readily than a gas meter; they are attached to the regular gas pipes. No change whatever in pipes or fixtures.

Works sent to any part of the country or world, with full directions for setting, which can be done by any one who can handle a wrench or pliers. The attention our Works require does not consume over Two Hours a Year.

Owing to the receipt of numerous orders from all sections of the South, parties contemplating purchasing will do well to order immediately. We cannot promise to ship any Works within three weeks from receipt of order.

State and County Rights For Sale. The best opportunity of obtaining a safe, legitimate and highly lucrative business ever offered to the public. Call and Examine.

Opinions of New Orleans Booksellers.

It is a book which has long been wanted and often called for. I am selling copies daily that are mailed to all parts of the world.

GEORGE EKLIS, Bookseller, Opposite the Postoffice.

During my long experience as a bookseller in this city I have had thousands of inquiries for such a work. "Mr. Dennett's LOUISIANA AS IT IS" is precisely the book that has been called for. It gives general satisfaction to my patrons. The only attempt country. It is true character was generally known it would require ten times the ... to edit one of his books to supply the demand.

P. C. HALEY, Bookseller, 103 Commercial Place, Branch, 134 Poydras street.

An experience of twenty-five years as bookseller in New Orleans will justify me in saying that the book just issued by Mr. Daniel Dennett, LOUISIANA AS IT IS, supplies a want long felt by residents and strangers. The demand for the book is active, and is steadily increasing.

JAMES A. GRESHAM, 93 Camp and 118 Canal street.

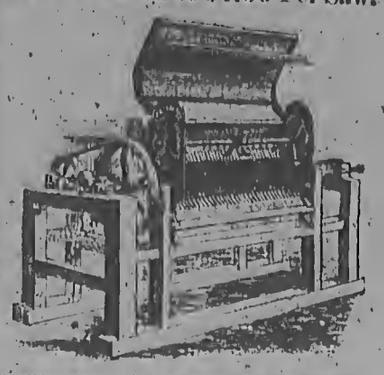
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It pulverizes all friction in the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the Same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, than doing a great deal more work within the same time while consuming less or minimal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

THE

BALANCED SCREW

COTTON PRESS.

THIS is the most valuable improvement ever made upon the Screw Cotton Press. It relieves all their good qualities, and adds the right equilibrium and ease to the screw.

The equilibrium consists in and on the part of the nuts. The nuts is opened and closed upon the screw by means of a lever. With the nut open, the screw and follower are let down upon the cotton, then the nut is closed and the pressing is done in the usual manner, then open the nut, and raise up the screw and follower instead of screwing it up. This raising and lowering the screw, by means of the counterbalance, saves revolving the press 40 least sixty times, reducing the time and labor of pressing nothing one half.

This Press has taken the premium over all competitors at the recent State Fairs of Mississippi and Louisiana.

MONETARY.

No extraordinary developments in this department since last date. While some few are hard pressed and are daily on the street borrowing, the majority are smiling along smoothly. All are disposed to contract their business rather than enlarge on a credit basis, which is certainly a favorable indication. We have summed up the capital invested in the various corporations of our city whose stocks are used as collaterals, and thus to some extent represent the resources of our merchants. It is as follows:

Capital stock of 17 banks	$7,984,500
Capital stock of 7 insurance companies	7,985,150
Capital stock of 8 city railroad companies	4,145,000
Capital stock of miscellaneous corporations	11,560,075
Total	$31,674,725

We continue to quote as follows: Exceptional paper, 8 per cent. per annum; A1 commercial, 10@12 per cent.; second grade, 12@18 per cent. Prices of stocks same as last week. Gold, 112. Silver, nominal.

COTTON.

The Exchange boards exhibit no change in prices during the past week, while parties on the street report an irregular market, sales being effected in some instances at ⅛c. lower figures. The daily telegrams from Liverpool show a decline of 1-16d. on Wednesday, 1-16d. on Thursday, and a still further decline of 1-16d. on Saturday. Week's sales in that market, 41,000 bales. Sales in New York, 4,261 bales. Sales here, 4,150 bales, market closing very quiet.

We take the following from Messrs. W. C. Watts & Co.'s cotton circular, dated Liverpool, June 23:

"The import here this week has been unexpectedly large; and the stock has been slightly increased, but there are now 172,000 bales less at sea for this port from India and America than at this time last year, and our imports for the next three weeks promise to be small, perhaps not more than 100,000 to 110,000 bales, whereas during the corresponding period last year they were quite large, namely: 224,861 bales, which ran up the stock here on the fifteenth of July to 1,047,450 bales, which was the maximum of the year. Should the import for the next three weeks not exceed our estimate, and the deliveries—trade and export—average the same as since the first of January last, the stock here will, on the fifteenth proximo, be about 100,000 bales less than last year, whereas there is now an excess of 36,740 bales. The supply of American cotton in and afloat for this port is now 41,000 bales less than last year. The statistical position looks to be a very strong one—and particularly when taken in connection with the fact that American cotton is now 1¼d. ₱ lb. lower than last year—and this will have its due influence on prices sooner or later; but the fact that present supplies are abundant; Manchester depressed by the continued decline in silver, and futures cheaper than spots, tends to check anything like a speculative demand. Besides, the position of Continental affairs, although apparently less critical now than for some weeks past, is still a source of uneasiness, and tends to induce extreme caution.

"The low grades of American cotton, such as range in value from 4¾d. to 5¼d., has for the past week or two been in fair demand. It appears that such trade as there is at Manchester is running largely on the lower qualities of goods and yarns, and the stock of Surat here being limited—say 120,000 bales, against 185,000 last year—spinners are resorting largely to the use of low American. At present the supply is excessive, and prices in consequence irregular, but as the season advances we expect their relative position as compared with middling will improve.

"The stock of cotton held by English spinners we now estimate at 112,000 bales, against 166,000 last year and 181,000 the year before at same date."

THE SCHOOL FOR BOYS.—Rev. F. M. Grace, A. M., once a professor in the East Tennessee University, and afterward president of Hiwassee College, puts into his paper, the Iron Age, Birmingham, the following notice:

"Hiwassee College closed its annual exercises May 25. We learn from the biennial catalogue that the number of students was one hundred and eighty-six, many of them from Alabama and other gulf States. There is no better school in the world for a boy than Hiwassee. Address President John H. Brunner, Hiwassee College, East Tennessee."

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The Seashore Camp Meeting will commence on Wednesday, the nineteenth of July, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, enjoying the cool and refreshing breezes of the sea.

Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore Camp Ground station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

Eligible lots for building will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent tents, and can be obtained from the trustees, or the agent representing them upon the grounds, at all times.

All permanent tents are required to be of value of not less than $10, and must be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

Favorable reductions of fare and freights on the railroad have been secured. On the New Orleans and Mobile road the fare from New Orleans to camp-ground, for the round trip, is $7.50; from Mobile, the round trip, $2; and from all way stations at proportionate rates. From Pensacola, Fla., the round trip, $7 60.

The camp meeting tickets will be placed on sale at the offices of the New Orleans and Mobile railroad, and at all regular way stations, on and after July 17, and continue good until July 30, inclusive. These tickets will not be good to return unless stamped by the agent of the New Orleans and Mobile railroad, who will be on the ground. This order will be rigidly enforced by the railroad company. The sale of tickets from local points on this road will begin as above, and at the same rates as last year. Freight will be carried from New Orleans and Mobile to camp ground at full rates, and returned free. Shipments can be made any time after July 10, and continue during the meeting. By the Morgan road passage will be half fare one way only. By New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago road one and one-fifth the full fare only. Taking these cars, persons on making known that they are going to the camp meeting will have their ticket punched, and retain it, and, having it stamped at the camp ground, will return on the same free.

From their new purchase of another hundred acres since the camp meeting last year, the trustees have made a large and desirable addition to the camp grounds, embracing several delightful and refreshing springs, cool and healthy-giving. The grounds have been cleaned up and improved generally.

Tents, cots, etc., have been provided for rent to persons or families as they may desire.

Provision has been made by the board of trustees, and under their supervision, for a good restaurant. Meals and lodgings will be furnished at reasonable prices. Use of bath-houses free.

Brethren of the Methodist Church, and of other churches, and the communities of the adjacent cities and country, are invited to attend the camp meeting.

Several Bishops and other ministers of talent and distinction from far and near are expected to be present, and to assist in conducting the exercises.

Persons are recommended to make arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any of the board of trustees: Dr. E. T. Griffin, Moss Point, Miss. William Dias and Hugh L. Hopper, Mobile; J. H. Kellet, George W. W. Goodwyn, B. O. L. Rayne, R. S. Hickey, P. Ballanco and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

NOTICE.—The Summit district camp meeting will commence at Magnolia, Miss., on the twenty-sixth of July. Persons wishing to rent will apply to Mr. C. C. Gibson, of Magnolia, who will furnish comfortable tents at a rent of $10 each; or, if a permanent owner-ship is desired, at $50. Application should be made from the first to the fifteenth of July.

There are two good hotels in Magnolia, and one or two good restaurants immediately on the grounds. Meals and lodgings will be furnished at low rates.

Preachers and people are invited to attend.

Let all who can do so secure tents, or come with cloth tents, which may be made to answer well for summer use.

We expect to continue the meeting about eight days.

Preachers and lay delegates of the Summit district will please take notice that our district conference will convene in the Methodist church in Magnolia at eleven o'clock A. M., on Thursday, the twenty-sixth of July. Come prepared to make full reports upon subjects indicated on page 51 of the Discipline. Pastors would do well to have their reports written.

We hope preachers and delegates will come expecting to remain during the camp meeting, or at least until Tuesday, August 1.

JAMES A. DOUGHEY,
Presiding Elder Summit District.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE SUMMIT DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Dear Brethren: Please send me the names of local preachers and delegates elect who will attend our District Conference at Magnolia, on the twenty-seventh instant.

H. P. LEWIS.

TO THE PREACHERS AND DELEGATES TO THE DISTRICT CONFERENCE OF SUMMIT DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE: Tell your arrival in Magnolia go to Dr. Wotten's drug-store, where you will be met by accommodator, who will direct you to your homes during Conference.

H. P. LEWIS.

THE CAMP MEETING near Crystal Springs will begin on Wednesday, August 2, and continue till Thursday, August 10. Let everybody come and attend the services. It will be on the self-sustaining plan. New tents are being put up and old ones enlarged. The public tent will be kept by T. J. Catching, Esq.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

GREENSBORO DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—This Conference is appointed to embrace the second Sabbath in August, beginning on Thursday, the tenth. Ministers and delegates who expect conveyance to be furnished them must be at Cuba station, on the A. and C. railroad, on Thursday morning; and any who come on the railroads on Wednesday night will be provided with comfortable lodgings at Cuba.

A. H. MITCHELL, P. E.

MONTGOMERY DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Persons coming to Auburn over the Western railroad to attend the session of the Montgomery District Conference, Alabama Annual Conference, can come at regular excursion rates, by procuring round-trip tickets at the station where they take the cars. Conference to open on Thursday morning, the twenty-seventh instant.

M. E. BUTT.

THE Alexandria District Conference and District Camp Meeting will convene at the Castor Sulphur Springs, Catahoula parish, La., twenty miles southwest of Columbia, on the ninth of August, 1876.

Pastors will please inform themselves fully as to the condition of their charges, so as to be able to answer the questions indicated in chapter 2, section 3, page 51 of the Discipline.

We would kindly urge upon all, ministers and delegates, the importance of attending this Conference and camp meeting. Ample provision will be made for taking care of ministers and delegates.

The Castor Sulphur Springs are unsurpassed for their superior medicinal qualities, the situation is all that could be desired, and we pray that the expected large attendance at the District Conference and camp meeting will be benefited bodily and spiritually.

S. H. CLOPTON, P. E.

NOTICE.—The camp meeting at the Pilgrim camp ground, Grove Hill circuit, will commence on Friday night, the first of September. A cordial invitation is extended to all who may be disposed to attend, and especially to our ministering brethren. Preparation will be made for the accommodation of all who may be in attendance. We hope to have a good attendance of people and preachers, and a gracious revival of religion from the presence of the Lord.

BASCOM C. GLENN, Pastor.

GROVE HILL, ALA., June 14, 1876.

HOMER DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—The District Conference for Homer district will convene in Arcadia, directly on the stage line from Monroe to Shreveport, July 27, 1876, and continue over the Sabbath following. The preachers in charge will please have their reports prepared, especially on those subjects mentioned on the fifty-first page of the Discipline.

JOHN A. MILLER, P. E.

THE District Conference for the Montgomery district, Alabama Conference, will meet in Auburn on Thursday, July 27. The opening sermon will be preached at eleven, A. M. As the meeting embraces the fifth Sabbath, it is hoped the preachers will arrange to stay till the close.

M. S. ANDREWS, P. E.

WESLEY CHAPEL CAMP MEETING. A camp meeting will be held, commencing August 25 and lasting some eight days, at the camp ground one mile north of Woodville, Lincoln parish, La. Preachers are specially invited to attend.

TWO PICTURES.

An old farm-house with meadows wide,
And sweet with clover on each side;
A bright-eyed boy who looks from out
The door with woodbine wreathed about,
And wishes his one thought all day:
"Oh! if I could but fly away
From this dull spot the world to see;
How happy, happy, happy,
How happy I would be!"

Amid the city's constant din,
A man who round the world has been
Is thinking, thinking all day long:
"Oh! if I could only trace once more
The field path to the farm-house door,
The old green meadows could I see,
How happy, happy, happy,
How happy I would be!"

The Telegraph's Constantinople special says: "The Servians were defeated at Lubovic, in Bosnia, losing two hundred killed and three hundred wounded, and also at Isvor, where they lost nine hundred killed and wounded."

From the Work.

SEASHORE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—The spiritual condition of this district, in a large majority of the appointments, is evidently improving. The preachers are all at their posts, some changes having become necessary since the commencement of the year.

In several of the circuits we have had seasons of spiritual power at our quarterly meetings, resulting in the conversion of sinners and accessions to the church.

In matters of finance we take pleasure in reporting that all of those works, except one, where it was necessary, have adopted a more liberal policy than heretofore. We have been successful in leading them away from that question, of all the most difficult to solve, "How much are we able to give?" to that which is more in keeping with the teachings of God's word: "How much ought we to give?" If we do not realize the full amount of the liberal things devised, we hope to attain a higher level. The advanced state of our Conference collections indicated very strongly that a surplus will be reported.

The number of Sunday school pupils is about double that reported last year.

Rev. J. R. Graves, the "Jupiter Tonans" of the Baptist Church, by special solicitation and pay, lately "held a performance" for five days at Moss Point, one of the strongholds of Pedo-Baptist belief. Result: Not one hurt.

The writer was told by a friend immediately after our Conference: "You have a district of immense distances." It was very expressive and very true. Two rounds have been completed, with twenty-five hundred miles of travel, and a fair prospect of as many more for the remainder of the year. Yet there are compensations. The mysterious music in the waters of Pascagoula; the balmy and health-breathing air that floats over the Gulf of Mexico; the romantic and charming scenery along the beach; the beautiful little cities of the dead, so handsomely kept and adorned with flowers, fit emblems of hallowed and loved associations; the groves of majestic live-oaks; the fruitful valleys, yielding an abundance to industry; the extensive pasture lands, with their flocks and herds, and everywhere the industrious bees plying their busy work, reminding one of that ancient "land flowing with milk and honey;" every variety of human development, from the highly cultured to those who still keep to their rustic simplicity, modified by the teachings of only one book; the universal appreciation by the people of the sermon, evinced by the fixed attention and the tearful eye; and, more than all else, the blessing of the Lord in comforting his people and in converting sinners, counteract the fatigue of the body, reanimate the soul, and kindle with fresh fervor the desire to "Preach him to all, and cry in death

Behold, behold the Lamb!"

The writer feels happy in his work, and so, he trusts, do all his fellows in the ministry of reconciliation.

MR. EDITOR: The Meridian District Conference convened at Waynesboro, at nine A. M. on Friday, June 23, 1876, Bishop Paine in the chair; J. W. Adkisson, secretary. Attendance of members, clerical and lay, unusually small. Great interest manifested by the people in the community of Waynesboro. The disciplinary routine of inquiry and response thoroughly ventilated.

Spiritual State of the Church.—No general movement of revival spirit. Good meetings at a few points. Attendance upon public worship and the ordinances of the church good. Indications that the work now being done upon the district will result in revivals and awakenings of the church at many points.

Missions Upon the District.—One mission under the supervision of the district—Ellisville mission, J. S. Williams, pastor. Eleven appointments; no church buildings; congregations tolerably fair—gradually improving. About sixty members, two Sunday schools and one prayer meeting. Pastor not discouraged.

Sunday Schools and Education Generally.—The Sunday school work upon the district was represented generally as being in a prosperous condition. Our own literature used, and a uniform and successful method of conducting the schools adopted. The subject of education received due attention.

Finances.—Conference and missionary collections being brought up tolerably well. Collections for pastors are behindhand, with some exceptions. Enterprise and Waynesboro charges paid up. The card and assessment systems prevail.

Elections.—Delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference were elected, as follows: W. M. Brame, A. Taylor, L. P. Brown, E. J. Taylor. Alternates—S. B. Watts, E. W. Stafford, S. Terrell. Enterprise was selected as the place for the next Conference.

Prominence was given to religious service throughout. Preaching twice per day. Some signs of a revival among the people when Conference adjourned, and the meeting protracted by the pastor, and others who remained to assist him.

Letter from Oregon.

MR. EDITOR: Sometimes, while wandering over these broad, flowery plains, or among the wild, rugged mountains of our Pacific slope:

"I feel like one who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled
Whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed."

However, I can realize occasionally that I'm not alone, for God encampeth about his people—he inhabiteth their prayers and praises, whether "in the city full" or in the wild, wastes of a solitary way.

CAMP-MEETINGS.

We are now in the midst of the usual camp meeting season. Be not astonished if I tell you that it is generally a season of showers, and not unfrequently pretty heavy ones. The proper time for such meetings here is occupied by the harvest.

We have lately closed a basket and a camp meeting on our present work, but with no marked success. June rains interfered and washed away any vestige of hope which might have remained. The preacher, wife and a whole nest of little ones started to the camp meeting in an Oregon "bus," with the rain slowly coming down, and with indications that the unwelcome visitor intended to stay "a good long bit." We trotted along, however, full of delightful anticipations never to be realized, when all at once we found ourselves, "bus" and all, deep down in an Oregon mud-hole—something "not to be sneezed at" by the boldest and the most hardy. Every one landed as best he could, while the vessel stuck fast. To add to the interest of the occasion, the rain continued with increasing capacity. At last additional force was applied and success attended our efforts. The next day found us at the camp ground in the rain; and for two blessed days and nights from that time "did the heavens give rain." Under all the circumstances one could not expect anything but wet benches and stand, together with damp, moldy sermons, prayers, exhortations, hymns and amens; but our brethren were in due trim for preaching, praying, etc., notwithstanding the bad weather and small congregations. However, the Sabbath's bright rays and blue skies introduced a most desirable change in the weather; and so we gallantly passed out of the storm and finally reached the quiet harbor of a pleasing termination of the meeting, when we rested a little from our labors. Our basket meeting had a similar run, and wound up in about the same way.

OUR ANNUAL CONFERENCE will soon be upon us, and yet but very little has been done by our church in this State, since our last session, toward the conversion of souls—the gathering of "precious jewels" from our mountains and valleys to decorate Immanuel's crown. Many of our preachers have been sick, and the winter has been very long and dreary; while other causes have hedged up the way and told the reason of this unfavorable state of things.

We have some excellent people in this State, who would grace any society by their polite intelligence, or adorn any church by the purity of their lives; but, while this is the case, the large majority of our inhabitants, I fear, is a body of mere adventurers, who are not after heaven, but earth—are not in pursuit of a crown of glory, but of a fleeting, fading diadem of time and sense; and who, if they enter a church occasionally, it is because of some improper motive. Our citizens here generally move and drift as the sands of the desert. A church may flourish a year or so, and may then in the next year, or the one following, be deserted and left solitary and alone. At or near some points on my present work there used to be strong churches; but now their congregations are all gone, and the houses of worship are locked up or tumbling down.

Now with all these facts, and a great many others, to discourage and set us back, how can we well help "going forth weeping, bearing precious seed," when we find comparatively so little "good ground" upon which to cast it. But it is true that we do not know what we accomplish in this world. Only the general judgment at the last day will reveal it, when all secrets shall be made known.

DONATION PARTIES.

In a recent number of the St. Louis Christian Advocate a brother over in Illinois makes quite "a flourish of trumpets" over one inflicted upon him not long since. He spends about half a column in the details. He goes on to say: "About one hundred ladies and gentlemen, with baskets, buckets, etc., containing sweetmeats, bread, cake, meats (chicken, of course,) entered." "The ladies arranged the tables, which were brought there for the occasion. And then the hundred, with the preacher and his family, ate the contents of the aforesaid baskets," etc. "And after all had eaten, the committee presented the donations—a free-will offering; not to be charged as quarterage—to the pastor and his family, consisting of money, dry goods, groceries and provisions, with 'wood and corn;' the whole lot amounting to $35. Hence the empty larder and depleted wardrobe are both replenished." While I was perusing this church "puff" I just thought of the "mountain laboring and bringing forth a mole." Some years before the death of Peter Cartright his friends in Illinois gave him a similar party with similar results. "There was much ado about nothing;" and he did not withhold his notions from the public, if the papers can be relied upon. Such parties sometimes "may be done up" right, and result in positive good to all concerned; but usually, I fear, they are made of "shoddy cloth," and there is a hurt to the preacher and people, instead of a blessing.

Portland, Ore., is just emerging from a flood, caused by the rapidly melting snows on the mountains. Of course the Columbia river has done more harm than that.

TAXING THE HEATHEN TO BUILD OUR CHURCH.—In a Massachusetts city, not far from the capital of the State, a Methodist church, some time since, built a large and convenient house of worship. As it was a heavy burden even for a vigorous body to bear, when the season came round for taking up the annual collection for missions, the pastor prefaced his call for the accustomed contribution by remarking that it could hardly be expected, after their heavy outlays, that they would subscribe as much as heretofore, and that perhaps it was due them that the collection itself should have been omitted. A brother, who had probably given as large a sum as any one, if not more, rose in the audience and remarked in a quiet tone, and in his usual measured sentences: "I do not wish to seem to differ in opinion with our pastor, but I think it would not look well for an able church like ours, in a Christian land, to tax the miserably poor heathen of India and other parts of the world to build for them a comfortable house of worship." "Pass the boxes," said the pastor, convicted of his error, and thoroughly converted from his false premises, and a larger, rather than a diminished, collection than usual was the result.

Letter from China.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, May 12, 1876.

Rev. D. C. Kelley, D. D., Assistant Secretary Board of Missions, M. E. Church South:

Dear Brother: At the close of the past quarter, March 31, I am glad to state, the work in Shanghai and at all our stations is very encouraging. I would have reported at an earlier date, but my health was such as to prevent me from doing so at once. But I thank my God that the prayers of his people have been heard, and I feel to-day, as also the past two weeks, that my strength and health are returning. My soul is filled with thankfulness and praise for the great loving kindness of our kind and loving Father in heaven. At our station in Nuziang I baptized two persons in March. One was the teacher in the school at that place, and the other was the wife of Bro. Fong, our preacher at that place. This teacher seems to be an earnest man, and I trust may become a useful man in the church. At Soochow we have succeeded in renting a house on a good street. The house is being built according to contract, and will contain several rooms. There will be a hook-room in connection with the church. I do trust, as soon as we get into this new building, we shall meet with more encouragement in our work there. Bro. Parker is engaging heartily in his work, and is making excellent progress in the written and spoken language, and we trust he will soon be able to do effective work in his new field of labor. He has been with me to visit some of the cities to the south of Soochow, where we hope some day to open stations and commence a work. There are no places of worship in these large cities which should be occupied. We did not succeed in getting a house at the city of Chingpoo during the last visit. The people are quite willing to let their houses; but the officials, though pretending to be favorably disposed, and willing, as they say, that we should have a house, yet secretly they are intimidating the people. But we will succeed by and by, as the Lord in his good providence opens the way. Our work at the village of Wongdoo is very encouraging, and also the work at Nuziang. Our schools are all in excellent working order, both in Shanghai and in the interior. On the first of May we opened a new day school in Shanghai, in connection with the native parsonage we have just completed. This makes two day schools in Shanghai, and one boarding school, one day [illegible] in Nuziang, one day school in Karding, and one boarding school in Soochow. We hope to open another day school in the city of Shanghai very soon. Our work is extending, and, of course, the necessary labor to be done is increasing. We put as much work upon our native preachers and Bible women as we can, but the work and labor of the foreign missionary is also increased to a very great extent. Can we not have more missionary ladies for this work? It is greatly needed just now in our mission at Shanghai. If you can send us some such help—ladies who are somewhat advanced in life, say thirty or thirty-five years of age—determined to devote themselves to this work, we shall be very thankful. Our schools are increasing in number, and it is impossible for one lady to look after all, and do them justice. Our native parsonage has been completed, and a schoolhouse built in connection with it. It forms a very nice compound on the Liew lot. It has been built at a cost of two hundred and four Mexican dollars. Half of the amount was paid from the fund of the Woman's Bible Mission, Nashville, and the other half has been paid from the rent of the houses on the lot. A very interesting school of girls has been opened there, and I feel sure there will be a good work begun among the women in the neighborhood. Bro. Allen's school-room has been so arranged that we can now have preaching there twice a week. With the prayers and the help of God's people in Christian lands the good work will go on. Good news reaches us from Hankow, Hangchow and Ningpo, that a good work of grace is going on in the schools and in all their congregations. We are greatly encouraged in Shanghai to see an increased earnestness in the native Christians; and, also an increase of interest on the part of the heathen around us to hear the glad news of salvation. We confidently expect a blessing; but how utterly inadequate are we to carry on this great work without the aid of that power which is given from on high! The Lord is working in the hearts of many around us in this land and in Japan. A wonderful work is going on in Japan. Can we not have some part in this glorious work? Cannot one or two men be sent to Kobe or Osaka or Kiota—all large cities, and very near each other? I would recommend either Osaka or Kiota. It is in the inland sea, and very healthy, and there is an immense population in these two cities. If we had a mission there, we from China, in case of ill health, could reach this point in about four days. I would like very much to see Walter appointed to Japan if the board thought it necessary or expedient to open a mission there. I think he would find a more extensive opening in Japan, and a more readiness to receive the truth. If we had a mission there we could be in easy communication with each other in regard to the progress of the work in both countries. I feel sure that if the board did determine to establish a mission in Japan they would not regret the step. All over Japan churches are being formed, and many of the Japanese are professing faith in Christ. It is one of the most interesting fields of labor for the missionary which we have in any part of the East.

Praying the blessing of God to rest upon all your labors, I remain yours in the bonds of Christian fellowship,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

THINK OF THIS.

Two men from Mississippi determined they would erect a church in Nuziang, China, where the glad news of salvation could be preached to those who know not God. This has been done. We have the promise of five hundred dollars from Kentucky to build a church in the city of Karding, to be called Taylor church. Who will send us five hundred dollars to build us a church in the city of Karshin, where a native Christian has given us land? In order that our preaching may be effectual, we must have houses of worship.

Southern Review.

ALEXANDRIA, June 28, 1876.

REV. T. O. SUMMERS, D. D.—Dear Sir: If you will be so kind as to publish in your Advocate the following extract from a letter, with the accompanying explanation, my reasons for wishing its publication will be obvious to your readers.

A friend from Mississippi wrote as follows on the twenty-third of June:

"REV. A. T. BLEDSOE—My Dear Brother: I saw no notice of the Southern Review, April number, 1876, in any of the Advocates that came to my table, except the Southern Christian Advocate, Macon, Ga. This astonished me, and has been in these parts an occasion of some unfavorable remarks. Two weeks ago I saw a line from Dr. Summers in the Nashville Advocate, saying: 'The April number of the Review has not come to hand.' This ought not so to be; for notices of the Review, whether favorable or unfavorable, attract attention and aid in its circulation. Our people are beginning to look for both from first sources, and consequently take nothing second hand. I thought it was due to you to know that some are ready to say the Advocates have quit the Review. If the editors do not get the Review, of course they cannot answer it. All this may have been the fault of the mails. The Southern Review is to me such a rich treasury of good things that I would, if I could, put it in every family in the land. There is no man, living or dead, who has been so much help to me in my search after truth as Dr. A. T. Bledsoe," etc.

I omit all the rest of the letter, because it relates exclusively to the writer's indebtedness to my writings. It would be exceedingly gratifying to me to have it published in our Advocates, but it is not to the present point.

I did not see the statement, referred to in the above extract, that you had not received the Review for April. Bro. Bennett, the editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, informed me that he had not received it; and now the statement comes from Mississippi that none of our Advocates, except one, has noticed the Southern Review for April. Hence "some are ready to say the Advocates have quit the Review."

All this was a great mystery to me; for I had not the shadow of a doubt that the Review had been, as usual, mailed to all of them. The impression which has got abroad that I had declined to send the Review to them has no foundation whatever in relation to any one of our Advocates. Such a thought never has for a moment entered into our imagination, and never will enter there, unless some unfriendly Advocate should direct the discontinuance of the Review, which I do not apprehend will ever be the case. As soon as I received the above letter I looked into the matter, and, to my great astonishment and regret, discovered that the April number of the Review had not been mailed to any of our exchanges. The printer, by whom the Review is mailed, had made out a new mail list of subscribers from the one furnished by the associate editor of the Review; but he did, not think to add the exchange list already in his possession, and in his possession alone. Hence our exchanges did not get the Review for April, without the least knowledge of the neglect on our part, until after the above letter was this morning received.

I will be obliged to those editors of our exchanges, who did not receive the Review for April, if they will be kind enough to copy the above extract and explanation. They will receive the April number of the Review with the July number, which will be issued in two or three days.

Truly and fraternally yours,

A. T. BLEDSOE.

Jonas Hanway, the philanthropist, having once advertised for a coachman, he had a great number of applications. One of them he approved of, and told him if his character answered he would take him on the terms agreed upon. "But," said he, "as I am rather a particular man, it may be proper to inform you that every evening after the business of the stable is done I shall expect you to come to my house for a quarter of an hour to attend family prayers. To this, I suppose, you can have no objection." "Why, as to that, sir," replied the man, "I does not see much to say against it, but I hope you will consider it in my wages."

A good life hath but a few days, but a good name endureth forever.

MIDSUMMER.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

A power is on the earth and in the air
From which the vital spirit shrinks afraid,
And shelters him, in nooks of deepest shade,
From the hot steam and from the fiery glare.
Look forth upon the earth—her thousand plants
Are smitten: even the dark sun-loving inhize
Faints in the field beneath the fervid blaze:
The herd beside the shaded fountain pants,
For life is driven from all the landscape brown;
The bird has sought his tree, the snake his den,
The trout floats dead in the hot stream, and men
Drop by the sun-stroke in the populous town.
As if the Day of Fire had dawned, and sent
Its deadly breath into the firmament.

Who Are Responsible?

MR. EDITOR: It will be admitted by all that intemperance, with its outflowing results, is one of the gigantic evils of this land, invading with destructive force all the public and private relationships of life. It will also be readily admitted by all that if the temperate drinking usage of society could be abolished there would be no drunkenness. What, then, is the source and cause of this temperate drinking that inevitably produces intemperance?

It may be safely admitted that the desire to drink intoxicating liquors does not originate in the force of a natural appetite, but springs up from deference to the demands of fashion, and the social customs among us.

From the social and public habit it becomes an acquired appetite, leading by smooth and noiseless steps to the treacherous path to drunkenness. By the demands of fashion and custom the social and public drinking usage has become incorporated into every pursuit and business of life; it pervades all grades and every class of society.

Here, then, is the key-note of this whole drinking system which we have inaugurated among us. It is the respectable, the educated, the refined and the fashionable who are, in a large measure, responsible for the establishment and continuance of the drinking customs of society. Let the postulate of the argument be distinctly kept in view: that what we commonly style temperate, moderate drinking stands sponsor to and is the condition precedent of that which is intemperate. Abolish the one and the other becomes impossible.

It may safely be admitted, therefore, that nine-tenths of those who commence the use of alcoholic stimulants do it not from appetite, but from a polite deference to custom and the fashion of the hour. Fashion possesses the ruling power of an absolute monarch. Fashion rules the world. Fashion sends its resistless influence downward and outward, permeating every department of life. And it is fashion that upholds and gives countenance to the temperate drinking usage.

Thus the man of wealth, learning or official position silently but surely wields a commanding influence over the opinions and practices of others, which fortifies and strengthens this usage, until mere compliance from custom, or the dictates of imperious fashion, has at last given birth to an intense morbid appetite, and then the descent is rapid.

It is in the abodes of the rich, honored and admired where the enchantments of luxury, elegance and music are setting the bewitching snares of habit for alcoholic beverages, and sending out and sending down the example through all grades and conditions of society. Right here is the fountain-head of the mighty river of social drinking usage, the great gulf stream, that bears upon its deceitful current millions of wrecked intellects, noble natures blasted, noble souls doomed and damned.

In the parlors of fashion, in the halls of the wealthy, among the princely merchants, along the busy marts of trade and commerce, in the gilded cabins of the river steamers, where friend pledges friend; where the sparkling wine, with mirth and music, with compliment and song, is invoked to give brilliancy to wit, proffered by the jeweled hands of beautiful women; where the dignified merchant pledges his faithful customers; where the busy broker pauses amid the rush and roar of the world's business machinery to quaff a glass to the success of business and rapid sales—these, all these, are the head sources of the swelling river of intemperance, in whose treacherous waves millions have been engulfed and gone down forever.

It must be confessed by every candid man, no matter how severe the reflection, that from this highly respected and honored source originates all the intemperance and drunkenness that pervades the land.

Neither the power of law, the force of argument, nor the most powerful and eloquent appeals to the conscience and understanding of the masses, will prevail to arrest this colossal evil so long as the educated and refined, the wealthy, and the fashionable, persist in sustaining this drinking usage. The argument, then, is narrowed down to the simple but momentous question: Will they still continue to give countenance to and indorse the master vice of this age?

Mr. Mill, the great logician, lays down the proposition, and Mr. Buckee, in his great work on English civilization, agrees with him, "that society, whether acting by the legislature or by the influence of public opinion, has no right to interfere with the conduct of any individual for the sake of his own good; but society may interfere with him for their good, and not his—that is, society may protect itself. If his actions hurt them he is then amenable to their authority.

Following this line of argument, he says: "The immense mass of mankind are, in regard to their usages, in a state of social slavery; each man being bound under heavy penalties to conform to that standard of life common to his own class." "They may complain of prevailing customs, and wish to shake them off, but they dare not do so, but continue to practice them at the expense of health and fortune." Men, not cowards in other respects, are afraid to declare their independence, and rebel against the exactions of fashion's tyranny.

Now let the refined, the educated, the wealthy and the fashionable resolve no longer to indorse this drinking system, and its power is broken, the question is settled, and society relieved of the mightiest curse that ever pressed upon its bosom.

As it cannot be proven by any one that it is either necessary, safe or useful, let Fashion issue the imperial edict, and rule it out of court, and let it stand forever condemned by all the wise and good, by all the refined and influential, by all the poor and wealthy in society.

Let it be done upon the unanswerable fact: That drunkenness, by a necessity of nature, is produced by the moderate, customary, reputable drinking usage, and that such is the settled, unchanging order of Providence.

A Voice In Behalf of Centenary Female Institute.

MR. EDITOR: The establishment, in the year 1811, of the Centenary Female Institute, Summerfield, Ala., was intended by the Methodists of that State as a grateful centennial commemoration of the birth of Methodism. Influence and patronage so powerful were exerted in behalf of the infant school that it became a realization of the fabled birth of Minerva. The spirit of wisdom rested upon the trustees in their earliest deliberations. They offered the presidency to and it was accepted by the Rev. A. H. Mitchell, A. M., a graduate of Athens, Ga. His collegiate training was improved by an experience as teacher in some of the most respectable schools in South Carolina. He came to Centenary in the prime of life, with a name and record as bright as burnished gold. Under the guidance of President Mitchell the success of the school was greater than the most ambitious of its friends dared hope for. Assisted by able and accomplished educators, many hundred girls received, during his presidency, thorough instruction. His graduates point to him with pride as their preceptor. Many of them are highly cultivated women, adorning the finest social positions. The University of Alabama was never more discriminating in the bestowal of honor than when it conferred upon President Mitchell the honorary D. D.

At the expiration of fourteen years Dr. Mitchell was succeeded by the Rev. J. T. Montgomery. Under his management the numerical prosperity of the school was almost fabulous. In October, 1861, the Rev. R. H. Rivers, D. D., assumed control of Centenary. Through those perilous years, the remembrance of which is as a horrible nightmare, he was faithful and true to all the trusts reposed in him. His resignation in 1865 was a calamity which was soon followed by others, chief among which was the death of the noble R. A. Baker, a munificent patron of learning.

Five years ago the Rev. A. D. McVoy, a gentleman of elegant culture, much energy and great spirituality, accepted the presidency of Centenary. None but those well acquainted with the school know how heroic the effort that he has made to conquer the adverse complications which threatened to destroy it. For four years it was a struggle for life. A less resolute man would have succumbed.

Convinced of the genuine worth of Mr. McVoy, and determined by united effort to sustain him, they organized an Alumni Society, and elected Mrs. K. D. Jackson, a daughter of Dr. Mitchell, president. Well-directed efforts were made to render the approaching commencement profitable as well as pleasant. Their reward was almost equal to the merit of the enterprise.

We attended commencement. It was a renaissance of the pristine glory of Summerfield. The ladies of the society worked as only Southern women can when fully aroused. From ten A. M. to eleven P. M. they furnished ice cream to waiting crowds, and they sold flowers. On Wednesday night the grand alumnal supper was served. It would have graced a royal dining-room. The evening was given exclusively to social enjoyment, save one-half hour, which, by special request of Col. L. W. Reeves, of Dayton, was granted to him that he might read to the good people of Summerfield a homily upon slander. They do not think, however, that they needed a lecture of that kind.

We understand that the alumni propose by their efforts to endow a scholarship for the exclusive benefit of the daughters of widowed graduates of Centenary. Is not this a noble undertaking? Surely all of Centenary's daughters will aid it.

Church Suit Settled.

HAZLEHURST STATION, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.—At the third Quarterly Conference, Brookhaven district, held at Hazlehurst on the tenth of July, 1876, the following resolution was submitted, and adopted unanimously by a rising vote:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Quarterly Conference are hereby tendered to Bro. William L. Nugent, of Jackson, for his professional services, rendered gratuitously, in having a decree of the Chancery Court of this county reversed in the Supreme Court at Jackson, in which the property of this church was involved.

On motion the undersigned was appointed a committee of one to furnish Bro. Nugent a copy of the above resolution, and also a copy to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

JOHN DUNNING, Committee.

MR. EDITOR: A few words of explanation are due Col. Nugent, as well as to the better enable the reader to understand the merits of one of the most important church suits that has ever transpired in the bounds of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Several years ago Mr. Killpatrick deeded the Methodists a lot of ground, as provided by our Discipline, as his subscription toward the building. But about five years ago the congregation decided that they wanted the house moved to a more central point, and the Quarterly Conference authorized the trustees to exchange the lot on which the house then stood for a more convenient lot, which they did, and moved the house.

In 1874 Mr. Killpatrick entered suit for the lot he had donated, under the plea that the object of said donation was perverted, and that the Quarterly Conference had no authority to transfer church property. Contrary to the expectation of everybody who knew anything of Methodist usage, Judge E. G. Peyton, Jr., decided that the land was of right Mr. Killpatrick's.

You may well imagine that such a decision created no small stir among the Methodists, as we had disposed of a great deal of very valuable property in this State in the same way. But during the session of the Annual Conference in this place, in 1874 Col. W. L. Nugent, of Jackson, Miss., expressed the belief that he could have that decision reversed if we would take an appeal to the Supreme Court; and further stated that if we would take an appeal he would represent the church free of charge. So we took the appeal, and through the untiring energy and skill of Col. Nugent we gained the case, which was worth much to the Methodist Church South, because of the principle involved.

I am sure that every Methodist will unite in heart in the vote of thanks given by the Hazlehurst Quarterly Conference to the deservedly popular and able jurist who fought this battle for our church, and against the best talent of the State, without one cent of compensation.

Note from an Invalid.

DEAR ADVOCATE: How often I have wished to say to your kind editor: "Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." But my poor helpless hands refused to obey the will. Hope would whisper too: "In a few more days strength will return, your labors can be resumed, and its fruits forwarded at once, and your debt to the ADVOCATE paid as far as $2 can pay for it." Alas! my illness has been protracted from month to month, and still I have not earned enough to pay this just and sacred debt.

Notwithstanding all this, you still come, dear ADVOCATE, to cheer and bless me in the midst of my poverty and infirmities. So often my enjoyment is banished when the silent appeal comes from your columns: "Pay me what thou owest me!" I mentally respond: "Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all;" and so I will if God will accept the sacrifice I have offered. He has heard my cry when I have prayed, "Give us this day our daily bread," and I have his blessed promise: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Dear ADVOCATE, can you trust me as I have trusted in his faithful promises? Health can never be mine, but Jesus has spoken unto my soul: "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace."

Wishing success to you and your editor, I still remain your debtor.

NOT LOST! NOT LOST! THY GUIDING STAR.

BY ISAAC N. MAYNARD.

My guiding star hath sunk and gone,
Down from her bright and peerless throne—
Gone down on life's dim, viewless shore!
Lost! guiding star! thy light is o'er.

For me now all is dark some gloom;
No more thy smiles light up my room.
So sweet when evening shades came on,
My guiding star! forever gone.

"She'll rise again," they tell me now
To soothe my dreams. "Push her brow
A diadem of gems and gold;"
Immortal spirit, as foretold!"

Yes, she'll rise again; but not for me
Those love-lit orbs on earth I'll see.
But when I sleep—my day-dreams o'er—
She'll light me to "fair Canaan's shore."

On you blue shores eternity—
Thy glimmering light methinks I see,
O brightly gleams, it beckons on
To peace and rest—our labors done.

Sweet guiding star, for thee I long;
For thee I sing my sweetest song;
Yea, hopeful sing—thy smiles adorn,
Proclaim: "Not lost! thy guiding star!"

Here sweetly on my Savior's breast
My head on "downy pillows" rest;
His smile lights up my brow afar:
"Not lost! not lost! thy guiding star!"

Hold Up the Light.

The famous Eddystone lighthouse, off the coast of Cornwall, England, was first built in a fanciful way, of wood, by the learned and eccentric Wistanley. On its sides he put various boastful inscriptions. He was very proud of his structure, and from its lofty balcony used boldly to defy the storm, crying:

"Blow, O winds! Rise, O ocean! Break forth, ye elements, and try my work!"

But one night the sea swallowed up the tower and its builder. It was built a second time of wood and stone by Rudgard. The form was good, but the wood gave food for the elements, and the builder and his structure perished in the flames.

Next the great Smeaton was called in. He raised a cone from the solid rock on which it was built, and rivetted it to the rock, as the oak is fastened to the earth by its roots. From the rock of the foundation he took the rock of the superstructure. He carved upon it no boastful inscriptions like those of Wistanley, but on the lowest course he put: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it;" and on its keystone above the lantern the simple tribute: "Laus Deo!" and the structure still stands, holding up its beacon light to the storm-tossed mariner.

Fellow-workers for the salvation of men! Christ, the Light, must be held up before men, or they will perish. Let us, then, place him upon no superstructure of our own device. Let us rear no tower of wood, or wood and stone. But, taking the word of God for our foundation, let us build our structure upon its massive, solid truth, and on every course put Emmanuel's humble, trustful inscription, and then we may be sure that the lighthouse will stand.

Cures for Fits.

For a Fit of Passion. Walk out in the open air; you may speak your mind to the winds without hurting any one, or proclaiming yourself a simpleton.

For a Fit of Idleness. Count the ticking of a clock; do this for one hour, and you will be glad to pull off your coat the next and work like a negro.

For a Fit of Extravagance and Folly.—Go to the workhouse and speak with the inmates of a jail, and you will be convinced:

Who makes his bed of briar and thorn
Must be content to lie forlorn.

For a Fit of Ambition.—Go into a church-yard and read the grave-stones; they will tell you the end of ambition. The grave will soon be your bed-chamber, the earth your pillow, corruption your father, and the worm your mother and sister.

For a Fit of Despondency.—Look on the good things which God has given you in this world, and to those which he has promised his followers in the next. He who goes into his garden to look for cobwebs and spiders, no doubt, will find them; while he who looks for a flower may return into his house with one blooming in his bosom.

For all Fits of Doubt, Perplexity and Fear.—Whether they respect the body or the mind, whether they are a load to the shoulders, the head or the heart, the following is a radical cure which may be relied on, for I had it from the great Physician: "Cast thy burden on the Lord, and he will sustain thee."

For a Fit of Repining.—Look about for the halt and the blind, and visit the bed-ridden and the afflicted and deranged; and they will make you ashamed of complaining of your lighter afflictions.

Some one says: The greatest objection to smart children is that when they commence having whiskers they leave off having brains. Boys that are philosophers at six years of age are generally blockheads at twenty-one. By forcing children you get so much into their heads that they become cracked in order to hold it.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

DIED, in Auburn, Ala., May 17, 1876, Mrs. RACHEL MARCELLA NEAL, wife of Rev. William B. Neal, of the Alabama Conference. She was born in Autauga county, Ala., June 5, 1820, and was the daughter of Lewis and Ann Stonlenmelr.

She was mainly educated at Valley Creek Academy (now Summerfield,) and was among the first whom that favored seat of learning sent forth to cheer the weary itinerant on his way, and bless the church. The first fruits indicated the abundant harvest which was to follow when the church should assume full control of the institution. In her girlhood she joined the church, and through life so regulated her vows that nothing could ever be alleged against her religious faithfulness and integrity.

September 3, 1857, she married Rev. William B. Neal, an itinerant minister of the Alabama Conference. Before taking this step she fully counted the cost, and was aware of all it involved; consequently she never manifested any reluctance to submit to the inconveniences and privations of the itinerant life. Her husband says that without murmuring and cheerfully she accompanied him to any appointment. To help him in his chosen work was the chief desire of her heart; his success in the ministry was her "chief joy." Though a member of the church, she was not satisfied of her conversion until after her marriage. Probably her new relation to the church caused a strict examination into her spiritual condition, and made her feel the necessity of a deep religious experience, that she might be the more ready to go where the church should call, and the better prepared to help her husband in his special work. She was blessed with a full assurance of the divine favor, and ever afterward bore a willing testimony to the truth as it is in Jesus. Her religion was her constant support and comfort in the varied trials of life; and, like others, she had her sore trials, in the pecuniary losses since 1860, in the loss of children and property, and the disorganization of society by the war.

For the last ten years she had been nearly helpless, and for some months before her death her decline was so marked as to excite the apprehensions of her family. But in all her sorrows and perplexities and physical sufferings she neglected that quiet, meek submission to the divine will which indicated a deep religious experience and an abiding trust in God. Wherever she lived she had true friends, drawn to her by her gentle spiritual, intrinsic worth. All who knew her felt that in her life and religion she was sincere and honest.

She approached the river of death as if she knew the bottom was firm and the everlasting arms were about her. There was no trembling, no shrinking, no fear. She had the assurance and confidence of one who had fought life's battle well.

Her tenement now in the sear and yellow leaf is all broken up. A place at his fireside so long filled by one he loved is empty, and the house "sounds hollow" when he comes home from his appointments. His companion and best friend for thirty-nine years is gone. He weeps, but is not in despair. Faith says the debet the mountains on the other shore, and he expects to reach the in soon and see her again.

M. S. A.

JOHN BURCH, second son of L. M. and M. A. McLendon, was born in Anson county, N. C., on the twenty-second of October, 1851, and died August 3, 1876. He removed with his parents to Kemper county, Miss., when a small boy, and there the greater portion of his time was spent in agricultural pursuits, of which he was very fond.

His last sufferings were severe, but were borne with meekness and resignation. With a constitution originally frail, he was physically unqualified to cope with the very severe sufferings, both of hunger and cold, incident to fifteen months' confinement in a Northern prison (Rock Island.) There, we think, the fatal disease, (consumption) originated, which finally terminated in his death. My brother was a brave boy; for, notwithstanding every inducement was held out to cause desertion, the young soldier, scarcely seventeen years old, remained loyal to the Southern cause. After his release he started for his distant home in the South. A long and tiresome journey lay before him. Being conveyed as far as Richmond, Va., by federal authority, the balance of the journey had to be performed mostly on foot, which was a Herculean task for one in his weak condition. But, notwithstanding the many difficulties that lay before him (bridges and roads having been destroyed, and penniless, worn and emaciated,) he reached his father's home in safety. Here a fresh sorrow awaited him. The brother whom he left battling for his country on Lookout mountain had fallen a victim to cruel war on the retreat from Tennessee, and sleeps in a soldier's grave near Resaca, Ga. The mother who had bade him an affectionate farewell, such as only a fond mother can, had "passed through the gates into the city of God." She was not here to take her boy by the hand and welcome him home again. But methinks she met him "on the beautiful shore where the bright angels stay," and all heaven resounded with the joy of that meeting that has no end.

After his marriage, in May, 1866, he continued near the old homestead until the winter of 1875, when his health failed so rapidly that he determined upon a change of location, and spent nearly a year in Texas. Finding no relief, he returned to the old home to die, surrounded by those he loved best. For six long months of suffering he taught us a quiet lesson of patience and humility. He was received into the Methodist Episcopal Church South by his brother-in-law, Rev. A. J. Coleman, and gave frequent testimony, during his last ... of a readiness to "depart and be ... Christ."

AT REST.

creep the shadows through the curtained ow up,
ter the crimson sun from out the west,
ound the sleeper falls a soft'ning gloom.
Rest, baby, rest!

for the wind moans through the branches snowflakes' wings against the pane are prest.

for an angel's soft bath pressed the door.
Rest, baby, rest!

Washington to His Wife.

only extant letter of Washing-his wife is an epistle of unusual h, both on account of its subd date. It was written June 5, and is as follows:

DEAREST: I am now set down te to you on a subject which e with inexpressible concern, his concern is greatly aggraand increased when I reflect the uneasiness I know it will ou. It has been determined in es that the whole army raised defense of the American cause e put under my care, and that cessary for me to proceed imely to Boston to take upon me mmand of it.

may believe me, my dear
when I assure you, in the olemn manner, that, so far eeking this appointment, I sed every endeavor in my to avoid it, not only from my ngness to part with you and ily, but from a consciousness ing a trust too great for my s, and that I should enjoy eal happiness in one month ou at home than I have the distant prospect of finding
If my stay were to be seven even years. But as it has been of destiny that has thrown on this service, I shall hope y undertaking it is designed er some good purpose. You
I suppose did, perceive, from or of my letters, that I was ensive I could not avoid this ment, as I did not pretend to e when I should return. That e case. It was utterly out of er to refuse this appointment without exposing my character to such censures as would have reflected dishonor upon myself and giving pain to my friends. This, I am sure, could not and ought not to be pleasing to you, and must have lessened me considerably in my own esteem. I shall rely, therefore, confidently on that Providence which has heretofore preserved and been bountiful to me, not doubting but that I shall return safe to you in the fall. I shall feel no pain from the toil or the danger of the campaign; my unhappiness will flow from the uneasiness I know you will feel from being left alone. I therefore beg that you will summon your whole fortitude, and pass your time as agreeably as possible. Nothing will give me so much sincere satisfaction as to hear this, and to hear it from your own pen. My earnest and ardent desire is that you would pursue any plan that is most likely to produce content and a tolerable degree of tranquillity, as it must add greatly to my uneasy feelings to hear that you are dissatisfied or complaining at what I really could not avoid.

As life is always uncertain, and common prudence dictates to every man the necessity of settling his temporal concerns while it is in his power, and while the mind is calm and undisturbed, I have, since I came to this place (for I had not time to do it before I left home), got Col. Pendleton to draft a will for me, by the directions I gave him, which will I now inclose. The provision made for you in case of my death will, I hope, be agreeable.

I shall add nothing more, as I have several letters to write, but to desire that you will remember me to your friends, and to assure you that I am, with the most unfeigned regard, my dear Patsy, your affectionate

The Influence of Books.

A little incident in the life of the poet Coleridge shows of how much importance in shaping his future destiny are the acts of even a boy. The poet in after years said of himself: "From eight to fourteen I was a day-dreamer and a gluttonous devourer of books."

He was at that period an attendant at the "Blue-Coat School," and one day while walking along the street his mind was busy, as usual, in visionary dreams of his favorite hero, and he imagined himself swimming across the classical Hellespont. In this fancied voyage he was throwing out his arms as if in the act of swimming, and ran one hand against the breast-pocket of a gentleman who was approaching from the opposite direction.

"What!" said the gentleman, "so young and yet so wicked. You tried to pick my pocket."

"I did not, sir," sobbed the frightened boy. "Indeed, sir, I did not mean any such thing."

"Well, what were you doing with your hand so near my coat?" inquired the gentleman, now evidently softened by the boy's truthful face.

"I thought I was Leander, and that I was swimming across the Hellespont," was the ready response, "and I did not think of my hands coming in contact with any one in the water."

The gentleman laughed heartily at the novelty of the incident, and was so favorably impressed by the boy's simple-hearted frankness that he gave him a ticket of admission to a circulating library in Cheapside. He rightly judged that this readiness of access to books would be the highest possible gratification to such a youth, and herein was probably laid the foundation for the subsequent career of the poet Coleridge.

His wonderful metaphysical and philosophical talents were thus developed, and his rare colloquial powers cultivated by converse with books, till in "linked sweetness" he poured forth the melody of his cultivated genius to the delight of all about him.

His mind was fed, but the soul was starved; and when near the close of his life he frequently lamented that with an intellect such as few men of his age had been blessed with, his career, in all the best purposes of life, had been a failure. Had the religious element mingled more largely in the books of which the circulating library was composed, how different might have been the career of this gifted man!

Books, even more than other surroundings, carve their own features upon the minds and hearts of the young and impressible; and too much care and judgment cannot be exercised in the selection of the literature of the school and family. All about us, sown broadcast over the whole land, is a literature reeking with infidelity, pollution and extravagance. Let us see to it that such books are crowded out of our houses by the introduction of those worthy to be read; and the false principles they inculcate out of the hearts and minds of our children, by laying the foundations of that true wisdom which cometh down from above, by a knowledge of God's holy word, a reverence for his Sabbaths, and a spirit of obedience to his laws. American Messenger.

A Tribe Living on Tree-Tops.

Among the papers presented to the British Parliament relating to the South Sea Islanders is a report by Capt. T. H. Simpson, of her maj-esty's ship Blanche, giving an account of his visit last year to the Solomon and other groups of islands in the Pacific Ocean. While at Isabel Island, from which three men and seven women were kidnapped in 1871, Capt. Simpson, with a party of officers, went a short distance inland to visit one of the remarkable tree villages, peculiar, he believed, to this island. He found the village built on the summit of a rocky mountain, rising almost perpendicularly to a height of 800 feet. The party ascended by a native path from the interior, and found the extreme summit a mass of enormous rocks standing up like a castle, among which grow the gigantic trees, in the branches of which the houses of the natives are built. The stems of these trees rise perfectly straight and smooth, without a branch, to a height varying from 50 to 150 feet. In the one Capt. Simpson ascended the house was just 80 feet from the ground; one close to it was about 120 feet. The only means of approach to these houses is by a ladder made of a creeper, suspended from a post within the house, and which, of course, can be hauled up at will. The houses are most ingeniously built and are very firm and strong. Each house will contain from ten to twelve natives, and an ample store of stones is kept, which they throw both with slings and with the hand with great force and precision. At the foot of each of these trees is another hut, in which the family usually reside, the tree-house being only resorted to at night and during time of expected danger. In fact, however, they are never safe from surprise, notwithstanding all their precautions, as the great object in life among the people is to get each other's heads. Capt. Simpson, in returning, visited a chief's house on the beach, and found a row of twenty-five human heads, captured in a recent raid, fastened up across the front like vermin at a barn-door. It was acknowledged that the object of the raid was to get heads, and to eat the bodies, which is always done. The heads of men, women and children are all taken, and the wonder is that the whole island does not become depopulated. The people of this and other islands are not, however, a courageous people. Such a thing as a stand-up fight between tribes is almost unknown, but they prowl about for prey, attacking whenever they have a victim in their power without risk to themselves. In some of the islands, Capt. Simpson observed, the men have long hair, which they wear in fashions like those adopted by the other sex in Europe; the favorite mode being the ordinary chignon, or loose down the back; the women, whose hair is shorter than the men's, wear it loose and undressed. In clothing there is not at present opportunity for European or any other fashions.

The Student of the Period.

Five-and-twenty years ago a boy's appetite for enjoyment was not at all seriously blunted at school, nor was there much fear of his round of holiday amusements being fatiguing. He seldom, if ever, enjoyed the intoxicating bliss of beholding his name and his achievements set forth in type. Now a change has come over all educational establishments. The work of the term, which has generally superseded the old-fashioned "half," serves as a foil for a round of matches, regattas, reviews, "theatricals," concerts, popular lectures, athletic sports, etc., all duly chronicled in the local journals, and perhaps even in metropolitan papers. Examinations also are more frequent, more solemn, and attract more public attention. Thus an energetic boy, who is "good all round," passes from one bout of competition to another, with little interval, during his school career. If home, as is natural, wishes to hold its own in juvenile favor, it must utilize the multiplied opportunities of amusements, so that the holidays pass in downright dissipation. At the universities the perpetual emulation goes on in an intensified form, while the newspaper notoriety which is bound to enhance the various passions of young aspirants to distinction is more pronounced than ever. Suddenly all the strain of personal rivalry is removed, the stimulus of frequent distinction is withdrawn, and the hero of an enthusiastic circle of admirers settles down as a commonplace person to a monotonous routine of business. Surely it is not altogether strange that for a time life should appear dull, stale and unprofitable. The more keen the stress of the probationary period, the stronger is the reaction when the definite struggles of the youth against his fellows are succeeded by the vague, desultory warfare with the great world. It is, indeed, astonishing that so many men can bear with equanimity the rapid transition from the glory of a university "oar" or "bat," or the more modest dignity of a fresh first-class man, to the insignificance of a brieflless barrister or a government clerk.—London paper.

INFLUENCE OF THE BIBLE.—It was a noble and beautiful answer, that of Queen Victoria, the monarch of a free people, reigning more by love than law, that she gave to the African prince who sent an embassage with costly presents, and asked her in return to tell him the secret of England's glory. The beloved Queen sent him not the number of her fleet, not the number of her armies, not the account of her boundless merchandise, not the details of her inexhaustible wealth. She did not, like Hezekiah, in an evil hour, show the embassador her diamonds, her jewels and her ornaments, but, handing him a beautifully-bound copy of the Bible, she said: "Tell the prince that this is the secret of England's greatness."

In our own beloved land the secret of our national greatness may be traced to the influence of this blessed, this God-given book. It is said that the first liberty pole ever erected in America was erected by the people of Massachusetts, and they surrounded it with an immense pile of Bibles. No wonder that the people of that grand old State have always been the champions of liberty.

The act of Congress in 1777, providing for the importation of Bibles, evidently has had much to do with our national greatness. The influence of the Bible on men's hearts and lives more fully displays the power of the Bible. The seeds of truth may spring up long after being sown.—Christian Record.

Prayer, if I may speak so boldly, is intercourse with God. Even if we do but lisp, even though we silently address God without opening our lips, yet we cry to him in the inmost recesses of the heart, for God listens to the sincere direction of the heart to him.—Clement of Alexandria.

Religious Intelligence.

—On April 13 the corner-stone of a new Presbyterian church in Boston was laid, to cost $115,000.

—The London Christian protests against what it calls "systematic endeavor" in the United States "to count the converts."

—The Maryland Methodist Protestant Conference has issued an address urging the other Conferences to join in a call for a general convention to meet in Baltimore in 1877.

—The United Presbyterians (Scotch) have opened a new station in connection with the old Calabar mission. This station is at Mbarakom, in the heart of the Ekol country, under the care of a native pastor.

—The Free Church in Scotland, which commenced its separate existence from the Established Church of Scotland in 1843, is now as well supported and established as the Established Church itself. Last year it raised $2,627,120, and since the disruption of 1843 it has raised a total sum of $56,229,075.

—The secularization or confiscation of the monasteries and convents in Greece is proposed. There are now 135 monasteries and 7 nunneries, with 1,729 monks and 168 nuns, in Greece. The yearly income of the convential property is about $100,000, and the full value of the monasteries is estimated at from six to ten million dollars.

—According to the Illustrated News there are "a thousand churches in Great Britain use unfermented wine at the communion service." In this country there is an increasing number of churches which take this course, and the temperance reform movement is strengthening this conviction. The late Christian Temperance Convention at Boston unanimously adopted a resolution to the same effect.

—How Christian missions ought and do propagate themselves is beautifully shown in all the colors of the rainbow spectrum in Yokohama. The Sandwich Islanders, after their conversion to Christianity, some years ago, sent as a thank-offering a contribution to the Christians in Japan, for stained glass windows to adorn the first Christian church edifice in the sunrise kingdom. The sunlight of every Sabbath irradiates the faces of a Christian Japanese congregation gathered in this church, which now numbers two hundred members.

—Livingstone's explorations are already bearing fruit. The Presbyterians of Scotland, it has been noticed before this, have established a mission on Lake Nyassa; the English Church Missionary Society purposes to occupy the Victoria Nyanza, and now the London Missionary Society, Dr. Mullens, secretary, is moving to fix a mission at Ujiji and Lake Tanganyika. Mr. Arthington, of Leeds, offers $25,000 toward purchasing a steamer for the mission on the lake.

—Some years ago, says the Presbyterian, two Syrian brothers, Sabeeby by name, founded a number of schools in the mountains of Lebanon. They used the Arabic Bible, and gave their whole instruction a scriptural tone. These schools have now passed into the hands of the Free Church of Scotland. They are under the charge of a superintending missionary, a physician and a lady superintendent. The Bible is taught, and the Shorter Catechism or some similar formulary. Mohammedans, Druses, Maronites and Greeks attend the schools. There is also an institution for the training of teachers, very fully equipped.

—The Coptic Church in Egypt is described by an experienced English missionary as the most degraded of the Oriental churches. Its superstitions seem to have been deepened by the influence of Mohammedanism. The missionary was present at a marriage service at which two priests officiated. While the Scriptures were being translated from Coptic into Arabic they sat on the floor, and appeared to talk and joke in the most disgraceful manner. Their private prayers are repeated seven times a day, and are in the highest degree mechanical. After they have repeated a great deal of Scripture, they say, "O my Lord, have mercy," forty-nine times, in Arabic, counting off the number on a string of beads. Their fasts are very long and arduous, and, besides those observed at special seasons, include every Wednesday and Friday. To the United Presbyterians of America has been committed the work of resupplying this fallen church with the gospel. The mission station at Alexandria is not very flourishing. Those at Cairo and in the Fayum are more promising, while the mission at Osiut, Upper Egypt, bids fair to revolutionize the Coptic Church of that district.

—In a recent article we referred to the fact that the Bechuanas are the most hopeful race in South Africa, and the most ready to receive the gospel. We find in the Chronicle of the London society a confirmation of this view. Likhatlong, one of the oldest stations in the Bechuana country, is now without a resident missionary, and is occasionally visited from Kuruman, one hundred miles away. The tribe, about fifteen hundred in number, has entirely renounced heathenism. The people live scattered, in small villages and farms. At various central places they have erected chapels, where services are held by leading members of the church and schools taught by the young people. When the missionary is expected the people gather from every direction into the old church at Likhatlong. On one occasion many were obliged to swim the swollen river, helping their wives over and carrying their children on their shoulders. Some of the swimmers were inquirers, and of the latter class fifty were presented to the missionary for examination. On the occasion of another visit the members from the different villages brought with them a large company of inquirers, twenty-three of whom were admitted into the church. Liberal contributions were made, and every book and catechism and tract which the missionary had brought were sold.—Independent.

THE DARK.

Where do the little children run
When they are made afraid?
Out of the light, out of the sun,
Into the dark—the shade.
Under the mother's downy wing
They fear nor care for anything.

Where do the little violets creep
When comes the time of snow?
Into the dark to rest and sleep
And wait for spring; they go
Under the ground, where storms can't reach,
And God takes tenderest care of each.

Are you afraid, dear girl or boy,
Afraid of the dark of death?
Jesus will raise you full of joy
To the world of light, he saith;
And where the little violets sleep,
Your body safe the Lord will keep.

A Useful Child.

DEAR CHILDREN: I will tell you this evening of a dear child who was not, as you are, surrounded by everything to make you happy. The sound of papa's footstep as he returned from work was not hailed with delight; as you hail your papa. Why? I will tell you. That papa was not a good man, but he was a bad man; and what he made by work in the day was spent by him at the gin shop at night; and his poor wife and children often went hungry to bed, and shivered with cold for the want of fire. May you, my children, never know what these poor children felt. Now the one I will tell of was the cause of doing much good. As winter came on their home was no better. Mamma, who was the bread-winner for her little ones, grew sick from cold and want, and little May must do something; so she got an old lady, who kept a small store, to let her have some matches to sell. She was a lovely child, and had she been carefully clothed, as you are, would have been beautiful. At early dawn her sweet voice could be heard, crying: "Matches for sale?" One day she stopped at the door of a great house with her matches, where she was seen by a fine-looking man—Mr. R., a man of wealth—who felt he was only a servant of the Lord, and his wealth was given him to do good to the poor, and not to lay up for moth and rust to corrupt. Seeing little May, he began to talk to her. She told him of her sick mother. Mr. R. said he would go with her to see her mother. May was very happy at the thought of help for mamma. Mr. R. found things in a really worse condition than he supposed. But his Christian heart was not long idle, and soon their home—such as it was—had a comfortable appearance, and the sick woman's wants were supplied; Mr. R. found May an intelligent girl, willing and anxious to learn. He tried to get her to live with him; but she would not leave her mother, but was willing, nay, glad, to come to him for instruction; which he gave her. As soon as she could read he gave her a Bible. This was a great source of pleasure to her mother, who never was restored to perfect health. The privations and hardships were too great; but God, in his all seeing wisdom, raised up for her a guide and support that she never expected. May, with her Bible, was a never-ending source of comfort; for she had not only learned to read, but had found the well of living water, and to her mother she had been the guide to that better land. What a lovely sight was it to a Christian's heart to see her, after the toils of the day (for she still did all she could to support the family,) by her mother's side, reading the holy word of God, and then talking to her of that better world, where sooner or later we must all be gathered. And it was not to her mother alone, but many of the inmates of the tenant-house came first to see the invalid, but afterward to hear of the wonderful things promised to those who love the Lord. Many of these poor beings never heard the word of life till they heard it from the lips of May. At some other time I will tell you of the class of boys and girls, who lived almost in the street, that May got together and taught how to do better and how to read the word of God.

From Our Little Friends.

JEANERETTE, July 10, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I don't know you, but I have been reading your paper so long that you seem like an old friend; so I thought if you could spare me room I would write you a letter. I am not yet ten years old, but I have a great deal to do—looking after everything about home, for I am my papa's only boy. I read the papers to him, and hope I shall soon be able to write his letters. I drive him about in the buggy, or ride behind him on horseback, to show him the way to go, for my dear papa is blind. Just now we are going about a good deal trying to get money to finish our church at Jeanerette. We began it some time ago, and after it was up and everything going on so nicely a storm came and blew it down. We all felt very sad, and thought it strange that the Lord would let the wind blow down our church; but our good minister, Mr. White, said it was all for the best. He sent us $100 from the kind people of New Iberia; so we went to work, and now hope that it will soon be finished.

I would like to tell you about our Sabbath school, and of Miss Olivia Gibson, who began it, and of Mr. Walker, our superintendent, who gave us a library; but it would make my letter too long.

When our church is finished we want you and Grandpa Theodate to come to the dedication; and, if you can, bring Tom along, for if he talks as he writes he will be a curiosity to us young folks up here.

Your little friend,

FRANCIS RIVERS RICHARDSON.

WAYNESBORO, Miss., July 10, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: We have a nice Sunday school. It has a great many nice boys and girls going to it. Our teacher is named Mr. S. T. Taylor, a nice man. He is good and kind to us—never speaks a harsh word to us at all—and he is always ready to give us good advice. I think Mr. Taylor is a true Christian, and we all love him, and I think he loves all of us. I love to go to Sunday-school, for every time I go I learn something more about our all-wise God, who loves us so well.

I am a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and have been for nearly one year. I am now going on fourteen years old, and as pa takes your good paper I get a chance to read it. I see so many nice pieces that it makes me want to write one too. My ma and pa are both members of the church; and I believe they are both Christians. Papa has been taking your paper for eight years. It is a good paper. I love to read it. It has so many nice, interesting stories in it.

I remain your true friend,

GEORGE G. HENDRIX.

Taming the Humming-Bird.

The ruby-throat has sometimes been tamed. Mr. Webber, in his "Wild Scenes and Song Birds," says, after several unsuccessful attempts, at last "I succeeded in securing an uninjured captive, which, to my inexpressible delight, proved to be one of the ruby-throated species, the most splendid and diminutive that comes north of Florida. It immediately suggested itself to me that a mixture of two parts of loaf-sugar, with one of fine honey, in ten of water, would make about the nearest approach to the nectar of flowers. While my sister ran to prepare it I gradually opened my hand to look at my prisoner, and saw to my no little amusement as well as suspicion that it was actually 'playing possum'—feigning to be dead, most skillfully. It lay on my open palm motionless for some minutes, during which I watched it in breathless curiosity. I saw it gradually open its bright little eyes to peep whether the way was clear, and then close them slowly as it caught my eye upon it. But when the manufactured nectar came, and a drop was touched upon the point of its bill, it came to life very suddenly, and in a moment was on its legs, drinking with eager gusto of the refreshing draught from a silver teaspoon. When sated it refused to take any more, and sat perched with the coolest self-composure on my finger, and plumed itself quite as artistically as if on its favorite spray. I was enchanted with the bold, innocent confidence with which it turned up its keen black eyes to survey us, as much as to say: 'Well, good folks! who are you?' By the next day it would come from any part of either room, alight upon the side of a white China cup containing the mixture, and drink eagerly, with its long bill thrust into the very base. It would alight on my fingers, and seem to talk with us endearingly in its soft chirps." Mr. Webber afterward succeeded in taming several of the same species. He gave them their liberty occasionally, and they returned regularly. At the time for migration they left for the winter; but the next spring they sought their old quarters, and accepted the delicious nectar kindly provided for them, and by degrees brought their mates.—Popular Science Monthly.

A NINE DAYS' WONDER.—"What are you staring at?" asked Rock, the shepherd's dog, as he noticed the cows walking one after another up to a corner of the field, where they stood with their faces fixed in the same direction.

"At the new gate," said the white cow.

"Why, it's exactly like the old one," said Rock.

"Exactly," replied the white cow, and stared on.

"And leads into the same lane," said Rock.

"The same lane," answered the white cow, still staring.

"Then why in the world do you stare at it?" asked Rock.

"It's new!" said the white cow, and never turned her head aside.

"What incomparable dolts!" exclaimed Rock; "if the old gate had remained standing they would never have given it a look, but this that is not a whit better, and leads the same way, just because it is new, takes the eyes of the whole field!"

"The password is 'Saxe;' now don't forget it, Pat," said the colonel just before the battle of Fontenoy, at which Saxe was marshal. "Saxe? Faith, and I will not. Wasn't my father a miller?" "Who goes there?" cried the sentinel, after the Irishman had arrived at his post. Pat was as wise as an owl, and, in a sort of whispered yell, replied: "Bags, yer honor."

Political Principles.

The average voter wishes to do what he conceives to be right. He does not expect to have an office, he has no hope of directly sharing in the spoils of party success, and he would not sell his vote for so many dollars cash in hand. He wants a good government, that will afford protection to life and property, give him low taxation, and promote the material prosperity of the country. But still his notions of right are very much determined by his own local and personal interests. These may not be in harmony with the interests of other sections, but they are right because they are the things needful for his particular welfare. The California citizens would proscribe Chinese immigration because it comes in conflict with their own labor, reducing wages, and depriving the Americans of the compensation for work to which they think they are entitled. They lose sight of the venerable boast that this land "is the asylum for the oppressed of all nations." These almond-eyed, yellow skins were not thought of then, and perhaps it was not intended to apply to any but desirable and useful people. The idea of right is their own local well-being. All men may be born free and equal, but let all men stay in their own country, and work out their own salvation as best they can. The wheat-growers, the stock-raisers, the iron manufacturers, are in favor of measures, tariffs, and such public improvements as shall subserve their several callings.

As between the North and South much the same principle obtains. The North cares little for the South beyond their own interests. The negro is a political factor of great significance, and the question is how to manipulate and make the most of him for their purposes. If he were in their way—a burden to their industry and a source of impoverishment—they would not hesitate to declare it a matter of justice and conscience to let him shift for himself. There would be no enforcement law, and no quartering of armed men in a peaceful and law-abiding country, if his vote were not regarded as a party necessity. The Northern voter may believe that his own prosperity is dependent upon Republican success, and that it is a righteous thing to secure this by the miseries which negro and carpet-bag rule entail upon the South. It is certain that they have some way by which the most monstrous wrong is harmonized with their sense of right. No sensible man, not blinded by political prejudice and religious fanaticism, will deny that the political control of the Southern States should be in the hands of the white people. They alone have the intelligence and capacity, they have the taxes to pay, and their dearest interests are involved. They are the natural guardians, the best friends of the negro, and their interests coincide with his. Leaving out the white adventurers as unworthy of comparison, we risk nothing in saying that the Southern white people are the equals in intelligence, morals, and piety of their fellow-citizens of the North, and that they are in a condition to manage their local affairs more wisely and justly than these can be managed by Federal interference, or by politicians who have no personal knowledge or sympathy in the premises. All will concede the application of these views to New York, Ohio and New England, and why not to Mississippi and Louisiana? There is the rub. Admitting that the Northern voter wishes to do right, the right is seen through the glasses of selfish partisanship, and his notions of equity and fair dealing are perverted by sectional prejudice.

On the financial question, as a rule, debtors want expansion, and creditors contraction. Capitalists and bondholders in the East are for hard money, of course, while the West and South are in no hurry for resumption. The platforms are equivocal, and both were framed in view of votes rather than for the exhibition of any earnest principle. A medium course is what either party will be compelled to pursue. Concessions and compromises, so as to meet as nearly as possible the demands of all classes and sections, are necessary, but self-interest is more prominent than conscience.

Principle in politics is a rare commodity. Professional politicians, as a rule, have none of it. The leading men in office—the representatives of the party in power—have none whatever. Of the party out of power it will be time to speak, when there shall be an opportunity to estimate its character. It is hard for good men to follow the behests of conscience and duty in political matters. Local interests, selfishness, partisanism, the sophistries of political demagogues and sectional prejudice tend to warp the better judgment. But there is such a thing as principle in politics, and it is this that, as a nation, we most deeply need. The war and the unconstitutional expedients by which it was sustained and supplemented gave the death-blow to all political morality in the North, and the abuse of the powers of the national government have perhaps tended to relax the convictions which obtained in the South. A revival of political principle is our deepest need just now, as a nation—principle that can penetrate and expose demagogism, rise above partisan traditions and prejudice, and that can rid itself of sectional asperity, and aim simply to do right.

In our Southern States it is important that the candidates should be good men—not political hacks, not drunkards, not pot-house politicians, but men of honor, probity, ability and good morals. If they are not good men they deserve to be defeated, and we hope they will be. We trust in God that we may be delivered from the misrule of the dark ages of the past ten years; but Heaven forbid that we should fall into the hands of the scum and sediment of any other domination. Let us have good and honest men for candidates, and fairness, with no intimidation, at the polls.

Crystal Springs.

We spent last Thursday and Friday, July 13 and 14, in attendance on the Crystal Springs District Conference, held at Crystal Springs, Copiah county, Miss. This is one of the pleasantest towns, and in one of the pleasantest sections of the State. The country is of diversified surface, well wooded, well watered, healthy, and finely adapted to a varied agriculture. It lies in the fruit belt. Peaches, apples, pears, strawberries, flourish, and the crop rarely fails, although it is an utter failure this year. Last year from Crystal Springs alone over $25,000 worth of fruit was shipped by rail. It is a cotton country, but rice, wheat, oats and corn are cultivated successfully. Why people should leave such a region as this, with its superior climate and agricultural resources, for any other section of the United States, is a mystery to us. How long will it take us to find out that the people of Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana have the best country in the world? In company with Rev. H. J. Harris and others, we visited the widely-celebrated camp ground, one mile distant from the town. The road thither is up and down hill, through noble forests, and across brawling brooks—a short but delightful drive. The camp ground embraces forty acres, and the improvements are near the center a most picturesque location. The surface is exceedingly broken, presenting a plat of densely-shaded knobs, ravines and dells. There are three or four excellent springs so situated as to meet the convenience of the different parts of the encampment. We tried one of the springs, and found the water cool and agreeable. The tents, of which there are between forty and fifty, are, for the most part, well-built, and located so as to meet the inequalities of surface on which they are built. The tabernacle for preaching is on a side hill, giving it something of the shape of the amphitheater, with seats rising to the sides and rear from the pulpit and altar. It is estimated that fifteen hundred people can be comfortably seated. The acoustic properties are said to be good—so good that a brother assured us the editor would not find it difficult to be heard to the remotest seat. The trustees are out of debt, and their entire expenditures so far are less than $1,000. Several new tents are going up, and we found the people of Crystal Springs and vicinity busily preparing and looking forward with interest to the meeting which opens on the second of August. The District Conference opened on Thursday morning, Rev. H. H. Montgomery, presiding elder, in the chair. We were sorry to find Bro. Montgomery in bad health, and by his physician interdicted from preaching for awhile. The business of the Conference was conducted by him with thoroughness, and no important interest was neglected. There was quite a full attendance of ministers and laymen, and there was usually a large audience present not only at the preaching, but at the business sessions. During our stay the spiritual state of the church, missions and the Sunday school interests were passed in review. The reports indicated a hopeful state of affairs, but, of course, with room for improvement. The president made searching inquest, especially concerning the baptism of the children and the administration of discipline. The subject of raising money for church purposes by fairs and the like came up somehow, and resolutions were adopted, after a spirited debate, disapproving of concerts, excursions and fairs, but allowing of suppers, and other plain and harmless entertainments. This is as we understood the action, but the resolutions will be published. The finances had not been reached when we left. Incidentally there were several allusions to the hard times. The interests of the ADVOCATE were not neglected by the Conference. A special committee reported on the paper, and large promises were made. We have reason to expect much from the Crystal Springs district. During our stay we enjoyed the hospitalities of Rev. H. J. Harris. To him and his family we are under lasting obligations.

Divine Assignments.

A life without a plan for it is the fault of no one who believes in creation. A life-plan developed by accident is not a rational belief, and it is not agreeable with the necessity for faith in Christ for any believer to suppose that he personally directs the course and shapes the ends of his life.

It is true that many lives reveal no perceptible plan. Some others make an impression of painful uncertainty, now looking this way, now looking that; while some others appear to be a constant struggle against evident destiny. Such apparent contradictions may produce confusion, but confusion is not a permanent state of mind where faith has room and ground to work.

In a prophecy embracing this subject, and directed to the Apostle Peter, all the particulars of interest are made prominent and clear: "When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest; but when thou shalt be old thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee and carry thee whither thou wouldest not." The well-known moral traits of self-determination and self-direction of this disciple are made the basis of a prediction which assigns to him martyrdom, as congruous to all the equities in the case. A sense of fitness restrains any expression of surprise at his lot, but not a feeling of anxiety to know if his case was an exception. He therefore turned the Lord's attention to John, asking: "And what shall this man do?" "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" This answer, not less clear than the prediction, makes the destination of the disciple to turn upon the will of the Lord.

The outlook in the kingdom of Christ's assignment according to the tendencies of the personal life, in which, however, the divine choice will assert itself.

The conscientiousness of working day by day, according to a divine plan, gives a consistent view to life, and a confidence in its developments that is of the very nature of faith. It does not affect the estimate of the divine choice that the destiny of individuals be different. The individual case is subordinated to the general plan, and all are necessary to the best expression of the final effect. There may come up temptations to draw back from such an understanding of the mind of the Spirit, because of the too great importance attached to the conditions of the creature side of human life, and because of the too great influence inhering in destiny, to comport with the free determinations of the creature. For the first we shall find a sufficient counteraction in the mixture of the cup which is in "the Lord's hand." It will not intoxicate with self-conceit, nor drown the soul in floods of despair. And for the other, he who has placed his life by consecration into the Lord's hands, "to order it," and to give it the greatest outcome, will not grieve under an influence that conforms him, by whatever of painful or pleasing constraints, to the Father's will.

Life, in itself the first, the best, the greatest of all gifts—and as redeemed, preserved, and devoted to divine ones, a priceless inheritance—affords an unspeakable joy whenever the Lord's choice prevails in its allotments and in its experiences, and whenever with hearty response the soul can say: "Thy will, O Lord, be done."

DOUBLE U.

Church Rules.

Under this heading the Methodist has an article full of point, and exceedingly suggestive. The editor's views are so much to our mind that we quote largely, as follows:

If we could go on, much would remain worth attention. Take cake and pastry. They cost more than all the tobacco and whisky put together, and nearly, if not quite, all physicians will agree that they are both useless and pernicious, laying the foundation for half the diseases under which we die. Take onions, garlic, and some other things whose use is very offensive to us all. Take some disgusting personal habits, of which very high examples might be named. Take coffee, which, after pastry, is the great life-destroyer, hurtful to nine in ten of those who use it, and the direct cause of most of our dyspepsias. Then, again, simplicity of life is outraged by most of us Americans at the expense of the salaries of our ministers, the endowments of our colleges, and the missionary treasury. We dress too expensively, spend on our table on an average three times too much, and indulge in much too costly horses. By adopting a vigorous policy of retrenchment in all these matters the church could save ten millions a year for missions and schools. Why do we not adopt such a policy? Partly because we cannot; the doctrine of Christian liberty is pretty well understood, and nobody is obliged to belong to our church. But we refrain from legislation, of that sort for a better reason than inability to enforce it. We understand pretty well that the value of any economic and benevolent habits results rather being personal and unforced, —that religion is a personal matter, and it is to be worth anything it must live in the soul of each believer. We are persuaded also that the good of six hundred millions would be chimerical, and we are wiser in ways of using it, and more secure in the administrations of such munificent trusts. In short, we lack the spiritual antecedents and moral conditionants of such a vast economy. Perhaps the vastness of the undertaking may deter us; for, if we are to legislate over this field of habits, we must get ready for a large amount of work. We are not much encouraged to do so by our history. Our sumptuary law about dress is a dead letter. A lady recently said that "the best-dressed women in the church profess holiness;" and certainly our members seldom think of the rule, except to laugh over the days when devout men stood at the door of the love feasts to shear the flowers and feathers from the bonnets of "the proud sisters." Some believe that we have less power over this matter of dress from the presence of this rule in our Discipline. Even in the matter of drinking it is doubtful if the rule is obeyed. Any church member who wants to drink can do so under the plea of medical advice, and many drink wine and beer without such advice, or any attempt at concealment. We think our rule sound for reason is often given; but it is doubtful whether it is practically executed. As to minor morals, it may be said that the satisfaction of the consciences of those who are habitually convicted of the dubious sins of their neighbors is not so strong an argument as it looks to be, because it goes so very far. If everything A. thinks wrong must be forbidden to B., we shall have an endless sumptuary law, and then only have begun our work. Sunday camp meetings will be stopped, using street cars on Sunday, etc., will follow. Stock dealings, holding United States bonds, and one thousand other matters of business will come next. The wiser policy may be to lay stress on the Ten Commandments and Christ's law of self-sacrifice, leaving the individual conscience to discover, by the aid of honest preaching and brotherly counsel, what may be personal duty.

Though not old, we have lived long enough to encounter razors that would not cut on Sundays, to hear sermons against playing ball, croquet and blind-man's-bluff, and against voting the Democratic ticket. We remember what courage it required twenty years ago, in some communities, to wear beards, watch-guards, flowers or ribbons; and our fathers have told us of religious scruples about wearing suspenders, leather gloves (mittens being the correct thing,) and bonnets that projected forward less than eight inches. And we have a strong recollection that lying, cheating and slandering were more rarely rebuked, and in less vigorous and caustic English, than the awful practices we have mentioned. The lesson of this experience is for us, that the stress of religious teaching and church legislation ought to be laid on offenses against the moral law which are always such, and that pains should be taken to avoid the very serious mistakes made in some of the cases we have cited. For twenty years the sentimental and doubtful region has used up a great deal of our energy, and we have so often forgotten to condemn lying, stealing and slander that the church contains many men who are dishonest in business and unfaithful to trusts, and to whom the truth, as an objective fact, does not exist; it is what they think ought to be true, or might be true, or will advance their interests or opinions. We strongly favor an earnest effort to enforce the simple and permanent obligations of Christian morality, and the leaving of the unsettled and complex questions to the individual conscience.

Wofford College.

We make the following extract from the editorial correspondence of the Southern Christian Advocate:

The literary societies, which hitherto have conducted their public debates in their respective halls, determined this year to hold them in the spacious chapel. The debate of the Preston Society on Monday night, and that of the Calhoun Society on Tuesday night, were among the most interesting features of the entire commencement occasion. The young gentlemen conducted the discussions with very decided ability, which illustrated the great value of society training as an adjunct to the regular college curriculum. Maj. David Duncan, of Spartanburg, presided over the first debate, and Mr. R. R. Hemphill, editor of the Abbeville Medium, over the second—each closing the brilliant entertainment with an appropriate and carefully prepared address. The valedictorians — Mr. S. Keener, of Louisiana, and Mr. W. E. Burnett, of North Carolina—acquitted themselves very handsomely, and reflected credit upon their respective societies.

The morning of Tuesday, June 27, was devoted to exercises in declamation by members of the junior class, who acquitted themselves handsomely, and elicited very hearty applause from their gratified audience.

Wednesday, of course, was the great day of the week. At an early hour the people in eager throngs began to press their way into the chapel; and they continued to pour in until this most commodious audience chamber of its kind in the South could hold no more, and many were reluctantly compelled to remain without. The graduating class—the largest the college has ever had—consisted of twenty-one young men, the peers, I venture to say, of any of their predecessors. All were allowed to make graduating speeches, and in order to provide opportunity for so large a number it was necessary to adopt the "short article" system. Six minutes only were allowed for each speech, but the youthful orators recognized the exigencies of the situation, and each made the best possible use of his decimal of the fleeting hour. The entire performance would have been creditable to any college rostrum of the country, and several of the speeches were decidedly above the average of such exhibitions. After delivering the diploma of the institution and a copy of the Bible to each of the graduates, announcing the degrees conferred in course, and reading extracts from the report of the faculty and board of trustees, President Carlisle announced that by the unanimous vote of the board the honorary degree of LL. D. had been conferred upon Warren DuPre late professor in Wofford College, but now president of Martha Washington College, Virginia. This announcement drew from the vast audience the most hearty demonstrations of applause, which fondly indicated the profound esteem and devoted affection with which the newly-made doctor has inspired the community of Spartanburg during his twenty years' sojourn among them. The feeling was universal that the trustees had honored the institution in according this distinction to Prof. DuPre, and that the prerogative of conferring honorary titles had never been more wisely or worthily exercised. The presence of Dr. DuPre upon the rostrum throughout the commencement exercises was a joy to very many hearts.

The baccalaureate address of President Carlisle fitly crowned the literary exercises of the week. The expectations, intellectual and moral, tacitly signified by the diploma and Bible just presented to each graduate, furnished the theme, and in its discussion measured up fully to the high anticipations awakened by the distinguished reputation of the speaker. The address was brief, but so pregnant with profound and edifying thought, condensed into the narrowest possible compass of expression, that it could be diluted into a dozen reputable performances for like occasions.

MR. MOODY IN BOSTON.—The Congregationalist says that "Mr. Moody has met with more than three hundred ministers and representatives of the evangelical churches of Boston and vicinity at the Meionaon, for consultation as to his coming here to labor. Mr Moody presided, and the conference was confined to these two points readiness to work and co-operate in the movement, and the best time to begin. Our own denomination was largely represented, and a very earnest feeling in favor of Mr. Moody's coming was unanimously expressed. Some desired the work to begin as early as October 1, while others preferred to postpone it till January 1, as Mr. Moody could then remain for a longer time. It is understood that his labors for the season will be divided between Boston and Chicago, and, should he come here first, he can remain only till January 1.

"No decision was reached, as Mr. Moody said that all he desired was to learn how the brethren felt. He wishes to spend three months in study at Northfield, as so much of his preaching had been reported that he feels it to be imperative to take this time to prepare for his next season's work. He withheld his decision as to the time, but it will probably be January 1. Chicago only awaits a telegram from him to commence a building, to be completed October 1, for the meetings there."

We learn that Rev. H. W. Featherston, of the Mississippi Conference, has been transferred to Los Angeles Conference, and stationed at Los Angeles. We wish our young friend and brother a pleasant and safe journey, and a useful pastorate.

Mansfield Female College.

MR. EDITOR: We had no visiting committee to report on the commencement exercises of Mansfield Female College, and it looks like that the president and his faculty should have no one to say that they are alive, and resting to resume their labors in the fall. These exercises commenced on Thursday, June 22, and closed on Wednesday, June 28. The examinations which we witnessed, and the recitations which we heard, evinced the fact that the minds of both teachers and pupils had been exercised up to a tension of high degree during the term past.

The pupils gave evidence of progress—some more, some less, according to capacity. It appeared to us that merchants' daughters could learn more readily than others the cost of merchandise at a given price. Whether they inherit the gift? President Armstrong seems to have a peculiar tact for governing a school. Everything was conducted with the harmony and precision of a well-adjusted piece of machinery.

On Sabbath Rev. J. M. Brown preached the commencement sermon, to a large and an appreciative audience, from the text: "That our daughters may be as corner-stones polished after the similitude of a palace."—Psalms, cxliv, 12. He showed that education is a mighty lever to elevate and exalt humanity, and place it in the position designed for it; that educated women serve the place of a corner-stone in a building, to hold it together, adjust the proportions, and to complete its beauty and grandeur.

On Wednesday (commencement day,) being absent on more sacred duties, we did not hear the literary address by Col. Jack, of Natchitoches, nor the essays of the three young ladies of the graduating class, all of which were highly spoken of. There was a full share of exhibitions and concerts, which were abundantly attended and applauded.

The college is in a growing condition. The president will travel extensively during vacation for the interests. Let the itinerant preachers of the Louisiana Conference rally to his aid. He gives their daughters a rare benefit.

Dr. H. C. Tweat, the father and founder of the college, was present to witness the success of an enterprise of his own creating. We could wish the college had a endowed chair endowed for him to sit in the remainder of his life; but, as we have no chair to give him, let us give him our sympathies and our hearts' best affections. The college is commended by its works. Its graduates are its living epistles, known and read of all men. The president and faculty are alive and wide awake.

J. P.

CENTENARY COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.—Of this occasion we have had a brief verbal report. We learn that it was a decided improvement upon last year. Dr. Munsey gave the people more than they could hold, or ever imagined before. Dr. Rives added much to the interest of the occasion by his address before the societies, and by his preaching. President Holcombe, who has been, with the college in its prosperity and in its trials, resigned his professorship, on account of failing health, universally esteemed and regretted. Dr. J. C. Wilson, formerly of Warren College, Kentucky, was elected to fill his place as professor of mathematics and natural science.

We learn that our esteemed friend and brother, Rev. J. Lane Borden, has secured spacious buildings and grounds in Monroe, La., and that he will open a day and boarding school of high grade in the fall. A good school is much needed at that point, and Bro. Borden is well qualified for the undertaking. A full corps of teachers has been engaged, and the premises are completely fitted up. For further information and circulars address Rev. J. Lane Borden, Monroe, La.

NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN BAPTISTS.—The Interior, in answer to a question, says: As the Baptist polity is congregational, it cannot be said that the denomination has any form of government, and, so there being nothing to divide, it follows that they are, in a merely technical sense, right in saying that there is no division. Nevertheless the division on the slavery question was more acrimonious and bitter among the Baptists than in any other denomination, and the division stands now as it was established thirty years ago. In 1844 the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society refused to receive the contributions of slaveholders into the society's treasury, which was about the most offensive way of rebuking them that could be imagined. Not even their money was fit to be in the same box with the offerings of their anti-slavery brethren. Upon this the Southern Baptists withdrew, established a regular system of conventions of their own, and set in operation their own general machinery for foreign and home missions, publication, and so forth. And so the division stands to-day as sharply defined as it is in the Methodist denomination, or any other.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Gazette, writing from the Round Lake camp meeting, gives the following:

"The Troy Conference refuses to allow the gates to be unlocked on the Sabbath, hence the Sunday congregations are smaller than those of any other day. But how orderly and pleasantly the Sabbath passes. The peace of those residing on the ground is undisturbed. There is no surging crowd, no profanity, no drunkenness, no tumult. The trustees regret that this rule excludes thousands of excellent people in this vicinity who would gladly attend the social meetings, and be present at public worship. They say that before this rule was adopted every road diverging from the neighborhood, as far as twenty miles, was filled with omnibuses, hacks, buggies, wagons and saddled horses, moving campward, and that twenty thousand persons swarmed over the camp ground. Believing that the Sunday question is the most important now before the American nation, the preachers of the Troy Conference will not rebuke their decision to keep these gates closed, and guarded on the Lord's day, notwithstanding the clamor from press and people for the repeal of the Conference enactment. By the way, a distinguished friend of Mr. Corlis, the builder of the great engine at the Centennial Exposition, said to your correspondent yesterday that the Centennial commissioners seemed inclined to yield several weeks ago to the great demand for the opening of the gates at Philadelphia on Sunday, and that at this crisis Mr. Corlis said to the commissioners: "If the gates are opened on God's day I will at once remove my great engine from Machinery Hall." This "decided the wavering magnates."

LAST MOMENTS OF BISHOP CLINTON.—Bishop Cheney, on Sabbath, the second instant, gave in a sermon the following account of the death of Bishop Clinton:

"Last Monday, at half past two o'clock in the afternoon, one beloved presiding Bishop breathed his last. To the instant of his death his consciousness was unclouded, his mind lost but for a moment its power. So sudden was the blow, so little was the first pain, and that of his beloved know[n] of his illness, shortly before... died he was asked what blessing should be given to the church in the bereavement. Looking around upon the sorrowful company, he answered, without any hesitancy, 'Tell them to love one another,' and, in a larger Methodist sense he left behind him a grand work." As he became more and more prostrated by the awful shock, I bent over him and asked: "My darling, do you know me?" "Yes, dear," he answered, "I know you." Again she said: "Do you know Jesus?" His whole countenance was glorified by a beaming irradiation, as he replied: "Oh, yes, I know him." Then he repeated the first line of Charles Wesley's hymn:

"Jesus, lover of my soul."

But the voice grew feebler with each word. For a moment a hushed silence fell upon the room, hardly broken even by the sobs of his household. Then was heard the last expression of those lips on whose words listening multitudes had hung entranced. But to the latest breath it was the same thought to which in thronged assemblies they had given utterance. He breathed out his life in the distinctly-heard recognition of his Lord: "Jesus! Precious Savior."

It is with the sadness of a personal bereavement that we learn through a letter from Bishop McTyeire, just as we go to press, that his mother-in-law, Mrs. Jane Townsend, died at his house in Nashville, on the morning of July 17. The Bishop sends us an interesting sketch of the character and death of this sainted woman, which will appear next week.

May I be one of the weakest, provided only, in my weakness, that immortal and better vigor be put forth with greater effect; provided only, in my darkness, the light of the divine countenance does but the more brightly shine; for then I shall at once be the weakest and the most mighty, shall be at once blind and of the most piercing sight. —Milton.

MEDICAL.

IF YOU FEEL DULL, DROWSY, DEBILITATED, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine. Extract of a letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1875: "I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies." 5p6c

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden, and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has frequently cured thousands. No drastic, violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

SHOULD not be regarded as a trifling ailment; in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand, paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impurities from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

Ask the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine. Extract of a letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1875: "I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies." 5p6c

Beef Tea.

A saucepan lined with porcelain should be kept to make beef tea, and never used for any other purpose. It is well to mark the quantities, from half a pint up to four quarts, on the outside with white paint.

Skimming is most effectually accomplished by putting a piece of blotting paper lightly over the top of the liquid, taking care to wet it as little as possible. The particles of fat are absorbed by the bibulous paper. Use several pieces, if necessary. Fat is more easily removed if the liquid is allowed to become cold, but that cannot always be done.

The meat for beef tea should be lean and juicy, and without bones, and every particle of gristle and fat carefully taken away before using. A very sharp knife is necessary for this.

If it is given long at a time, the seasoning must be varied, else it excites disgust. For this purpose, one clove heated in a portion is of use. Another way to season it is to take a tablespoonful of celery seed tied up in a bit of muslin, and heat it in a portion. The same little bag of seed can be used four times. Still another way is to serve it cold, with half a teaspoonful of lemon juice to a portion.

The very best way to make beef tea is as follows: Three pounds of beef cut into dice and thrown into three pints of cold water. Let it stand three hours. Add half a teaspoonful of salt. Then cover it, and put it on a slow fire; let it simmer, but never boil, until the quantity is reduced one-half. This will take six hours at least. Strain and set aside till next day, when skim, season and serve hot. It should be perfectly clear, and a golden brown color. It is very nice to cut half a slice of stale bread in dice, roast them in a quick oven for five minutes, turning so that they brown evenly, and put them in the bottom of the basin before pouring in the tea. The cup ought always to be warmed with hot water before using for any hot drink.

Where beef tea is needed quickly take half a pound of beef chopped finely, and soak it in half a pint of cold water, with a little salt, for ten minutes. Then heat it slowly to a boiling-point, and let it boil three minutes. Strain, skim, season and serve hot. Or cut half a pound of beef into dice, and put it into a wide-mouthed bottle; with just cold water enough to cover it. Cork the bottle, and put it in a saucepan of cold water over a slow fire. When the water in the saucepan boils the tea is made. Strain, skim, season and serve hot. This last makes about half a cup full.

Eating and Dyspepsia.

It is an old German adage that "more people dig their own graves with their teeth than with spades," and verily it would seem so if we would look at the immense number of dyspeptics, rheumatic and gouty individuals creeping through life in pain and wretchedness. Yet it is next to impossible to induce even thinking people to control their appetites, and to eat such things and at such times as nature shows them is necessary and right. Dr. Hall declares unhesitatingly that it is wrong to eat without an appetite, for it shows there is no gastric juice in the stomach, and that nature does not need food, and, not needing it, there being no fluid to receive and act upon it, it remains there only to putrefy, the very thought of which should be sufficient to deter any man from eating without an appetite the remainder of his life. If a tonic is taken to whet the appetite it is a mistaken course, for its only result is to cause one to eat more, when already a sufficient has been eaten beyond what the gastric juice is able to prepare. The object to be obtained is a large supply of gastric juice; whatever fails to accomplish that essential object fails to have any efficacy toward the cure of dyspeptic diseases. The formation of gastric juice is directly proportioned to the wear and tear of the system, which it is to be the means of supplying, and this wear and tear can only take place as the result of exercise. The efficient remedy for dyspeptics is work—out-door work—beneficial and successful in direct proportion as it is agreeable, interesting and profitable.—Rural New Yorker.

PUFFS OR POP OVERS.—Take one pint of sweet milk, two eggs, three and one-half cups (ordinary size) of flour, and one and one-half a teaspoonful of salt. The eggs should be beaten very light before adding the milk and flour, and the whole well beaten and perfectly free from lumps before placing in the cups, which should be heated and very thoroughly buttered (not greased,) and about one-third filled with the batter. It is better to turn the milk and eggs upon the already sifted flour, adding it by degrees, as with care there will be no lumps if mixed this way, instead of putting the flour gradually into the liquid. Bake in a quick oven about twenty minutes. Our range will bake them in fifteen minutes. It saves trouble and annoyance, as well as some burning of fingers, if the pans or cups are placed in a large dripping-pan before placing in the oven.

NAILS IN FRUIT TREES.—Nails driven into fruit trees, as near the ground as possible, are said to have the effect of making such trees more healthy, vigorous and excellent than those into which no nails have been driven. The reason why nails are so beneficial is thus explained: The reason why the worm will not attack the tree is because the oxidation or rusting of the iron by the sap evolves ammonia, which, as the sap rises, will of course impregnate every part of the foliage, and prove too drastic a dose for the delicate palates of intruding insects. The salt of iron afforded by nails is extremely offensive to the worms, while it is not only harmless but beneficial to the foliage and fruit of the tree.

Wesleyan Female Institute,

STAUNTON, VA.

THIS school, in its twenty-seventh annual session, SEPTEMBER 21, 1876, Rev. W. A. HARRIS, D. D., President, will have a full corps of twenty-three teachers and 300 pupils.

Modern Languages taught and spoken in the college by a European teacher, Music by able professors and teachers, among whom are some of the best cultivated teachers of vocal music in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the Union. Its marked feature is the rapid promotion of the health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come here from the South with feeble constitutions and delicate diseases are generally restored.

Buildings, regal—fanned by purest breezes, commanding the most magnificent scenery, and combining such variety of attractions as to make it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

This school is usually attended by pupils from fifteen to seventeen different states.

Great economy and simplicity in dress are required. A simple uniform is worn. No unnecessary expense allowed. Strict economy practiced to limit expenses of pupils.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Va., under the presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions for young ladies in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters there. Its course of study is ample, its faculty accomplished and its instruction both solid and elegant. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort or taste. No location could be more eligible, no scenery more magnificent, no atmosphere more salubrious. Nor the least of its merits is that sacred regard for the religious training of youth which no female college especially would be a blessing.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is under the control of the Church. Instruction is thorough, the pupils numerous and well taught, and the discipline excellent. The buildings are commodious, and neither time nor expense are spared to make this department efficient.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtues and its high reputation in all parts of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge when seasonably resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, as it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or at less quantity at intervals of three to four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night can take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER!

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turpin's "Hair That"

HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the indorsement of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind. No washing or preparation of the hair is necessary before using.

It is free from all deleterious ingredients, containing no Lead Sulphur or other compounds when are poisonous to the Hair or Person, by Absorption.

And its use saves both time and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb, once a month or so, to the Hair or Whiskers, answers the purpose. Any shade of color being so perfectly assimilated as to defy detection. Its great recommendation is in the gradualness of tint, producing any desired shade from light brown to the deepest black and even the absence of that dry and burned appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery can be applied to a single hair or spot so that hair can be restored to their original shade without applying all over the head, as is necessary when using other Hair Dyes.

Sample box sent free by mail to any address in the United States upon receipt of price, One Dollar, by the inventor and proprietor.

JAMES TURNER, Chemist,
P. O. Box 2531. New Orleans.

Scientific.

—Some interesting observations have lately been made by M. Scolosuboff, of Moscow, on the localization of arsenic in different tissues of animals that have been poisoned with it. The animals treated were dogs, rabbits, guinea pigs and frogs, and the poison was given in the form of a known volume of a solution of arsenate of sodium along with the food. The author has remarked that dogs can absorb with impunity enormous quantities of arsenous acid—fifteen to eighteen times stronger doses than that which would prove fatal to man. He finds that the poison is mostly concentrated in the nervous substance. Thus in a dog the quantity of arsenic recovered from 100 grammes of fresh muscle was represented by 1, that from an equal weight of liver by 10.8, brain by 5, spinal cord 37.3. The results were, perhaps, still more striking in acute poisoning, the arsenate of sodium having been injected under the skin. The medico-legal expert, then, would seek for the metalloid specially in the brain of victims. Sometimes, in the case of very rapid poisoning, the liver may not contain any of the substance sought.

TANNING BY ELECTRICITY.—A novel application of electricity in the industrial arts has recently been made, whereby leather may be more quickly tanned. It is stated that if an electric current is passed through a solution of tannin in a reservoir, the bottom of which is one pole, while the other is at the surface of the liquid, and if skins be interposed during the passage of the current, a molecular transmission of tannin from one pole to another takes place. In its passage the tannin thus enters the skins, which are penetrated by it much more quickly than by the ordinary soaking process. Evidence that the current is an actual agent in accomplishing this result appears in the fact that the skins nearest the positive pole are always penetrated first. The following is a brief description of the apparatus: The bottom of the vessel or tank is formed of a plate or series of plates of retort charcoal. A copper wire surrounded with gutta-percha is fastened to this bottom, and rises along a vertical side. The upper surface is covered with a sheet of zinc, to which a negative pole is fitted. The two poles are in connection with a battery of magneto-electric machine. The skins are arranged in the reservoir alternately, with layers of bark in the usual way.

REMOVAL.—A CARD.—In obedience to the expressed wishes of many of my patrons I have removed my office from my residence, 107 Napoleon avenue to TIVOLI CIRCLE, west side, corner of Leonard street. This office has been selected by reason of its affording excellent rooms and fine light, and for its central location and ease of access by car lines.

My patrons need scarcely be reminded that no efforts will be spared to render them the best service. In Dentistry the best is always the cheapest.

The Editors of New Orleans have given this book a strong endorsement.

Opinions of New Orleans Booksellers.

It is a book which has long been wanted and of great value for [illegible] daily that are shared by [illegible] parts of the world.

CHARLES ELLIS, Bookseller, Opposite the Postoffice.

He has had long experience as a bookseller in this city, and [illegible] thousands of inquiries for such a work. Mr. Dennett's LOUISIANA AS IT IS seems to be a book that has been called for. It gives general information to the public in the clearest manner. Its statistical character is generally known, and requires no [illegible] present value. [illegible] is [illegible] and [illegible].

C. C. HALTY, Bookseller, 74 Commercial Place, Between 1st Poydras street.

We have been receiving orders for books by mail from all parts of the country since we opened our doors. Mr. Dennett's LOUISIANA AS IT IS appears to us will long [illegible] by [illegible] of Strangers. The demand for the book is active, and is easily increasing.

THE

BALANCED SCREW

COTTON PRESS.

THIS is the most valuable improvement ever made in Screw Cotton Presses. It obtains all those good qualities and [illegible] its degree rapidity and ease of operation.

[illegible] is [illegible] and [illegible] in two parts. The nut is open and closed upon the screw by means of a key. With the nut open, the screw and follower are let down upon the cotton, then the nut is closed and the pressing is done in the usual manner. Then open the nut, and raise up the screw and follower instead of screwing it up. This raising and lowering the screw by means of the counterbalance, saves revolving the press at least sixty times, reducing the time and labor of pressing cotton one half.

This Press has taken the premium over all competitors at the recent State Fairs of Mississippi and Louisiana.

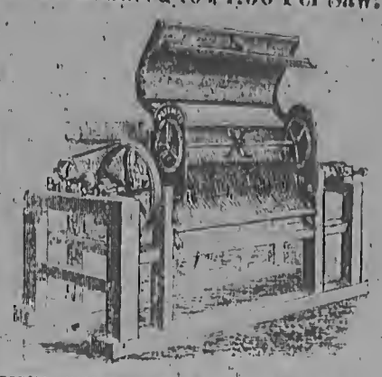
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the Same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while consuming steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

MONETARY.

We are without any special matters of interest to notice this week. A few sales of stocks and bonds are made daily, also the daily movements in commercial paper at previous rates. Money continues easy to those who do not require it, and hard to get for those who sadly need it.

GENERAL MARKET.

There is a marked improvement in shipments this week; indeed in some houses the clerks complain of being busy. Our boats are getting better loads. Machine shops are busy repairing and manufacturing sugar machinery. The rice mills are ready for work, and everybody is anticipating a good season's business.

THE SCHOOL FOR BOYS.—Rev. F. M. Grice, A. M., once a professor in the East Tennessee University, and afterward president of Hiwassee College, puts into his paper, the Iron Age, Birmingham, the following notice:

"Hiwassee College closed its annual exercises May 25. We learn from the biennial catalogue that the number of students was one hundred and eighty-six, many of them from Alabama and other gulf States. There is no better school in the world for a boy than Hiwassee." Address, President John H. Brunner, Hiwassee College, East Tennessee."

UNION CAMP GROUND.—Change of Time.—The time of holding the camp meeting at the Union camp ground, in the Grove Hill cir. ad, is changed from Friday, September 1, to Friday, September 8. The meeting will not be self-sustaining, from the fact that there are so few tenters; though the invitation is still extended to all.

B. T. GLENN, Pastor.

GROVE HILL, Ala., July 10, 1876.

CAMP MEETING NOTICE.—There will be a camp meeting at Pilgrim's Rest, Philadelphia circuit, beginning on the first day of September next. Ministerial brethren are cordially invited to attend. D. G. W. ELLIS, P. C.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—The Eufaula District Conference will be held at Louisville, beginning on Wednesday night, August 23, 1876. Sermon by the Rev. Jere. S. Williams.

W. H. ELLISON, P. E.

NOTICE.—The Summit district camp meeting will commence at Magnolia, Miss., on the twenty-sixth of July. Persons wishing to rent will apply to M. C. C. Gibson, of Magnolia, who will furnish commodious tents at a rent of $10 each; or, if a permanent owner-ship is desired at $50. Applications should be made from the first to the fifteenth of July.

There are two good hotels in Magnolia, and one or two good restaurants, all within easy call of the grounds. Meals and lodgings will be furnished at low rates.

Preachers and people are invited to attend.

Let all who can do so secure tents or come with cloth tents, which may be made to answer well for summer use.

We expect to continue the meeting about eight days.

Preachers and lay delegates of the Summit district will please take notice that our District Conference will convene in the Methodist church in Magnolia at eleven o'clock A. M. on Thursday, the twenty-sixth of July. Come prepared to make full reports upon subjects indicated on page 51 of the Discipline. Pastors would do well to have their reports written.

We hope preachers and delegates will come expecting to remain during the camp meeting, or at least until Tuesday, August 1.

JAMES V. GODFREY,
Presiding Elder Summit District.

THE Alexandria District Conference and District Camp Meeting will convene at the Castor Selph (Spring) station (the old Spring Hill), twenty miles southwest of Columbia, on the ninth of August, 1876.

Preachers will please inform themselves of the time of the District Conference, so as to be able to answer the roll-call at the proper hour.

We would say to the brethren generally that we hope to have a good meeting, and pray that the Lord may bless us with the presence of his Spirit. Let all come prepared for the camp meeting, and for the Conference, and we will be glad to see you.

H. H. COOKE, P. E.

TO THE PREACHERS AND DELEGATES of the Fifth District Conference of Seward District, Mississippi Conference.—Our next quarterly Conference will convene in Madison, 20 miles from Jackson, on the Western Railroad, three miles from the Madison depot, on Thursday, the twenty-seventh of July, 1876. Preachers and delegates will come prepared to make full reports upon subjects indicated on page 51 of the Discipline. Pastors would do well to have their reports written.

We hope preachers and delegates will come expecting to remain during the camp meeting, or at least until Tuesday, August 1.

H. P. LEWIS.

THE CAMP MEETING near Crystal Springs will begin on Wednesday, August 2, and continue until Thursday, August 10. Let everybody come and attend the services. It will be on the self-sustaining plan. New tents are being put up and old ones enlarged. The public tent will be kept by F. J. Gathing, Esq.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

GREENSBORO DISTRICT CONFERENCE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Lafayette Conference is appointed to embrace the second Sabbath in August, beginning on Thursday, the tenth. Ministers and delegates who expect conveyances to be furnished them must be at Union station, on the A. and C. railroad, on Thursday morning, and any who come on the railroads on Wednesday night will be provided with comfortable lodgings at Cubb's.

A. H. MACDONELL, P. E.

MONTGOMERY DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Persons coming to Auburn over the Western railroad to attend the session of the Montgomery District Conference, Alabama Annual Conference, can come at regular excursion rates by procuring round-trip tickets at the station where they take the cars. Conference to open on Thursday morning, the twenty-seventh instant.

M. S. ANDREWS.

HOMER DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—The District Conference for Homer district will convene in Arcadia, directly on the stage line from Monroe to Shreveport, July 27, 1876, and continue over the Sabbath following. The preachers in charge will please have their reports prepared, especially on those subjects mentioned on the fifty-first page of the Discipline.

JOHN A. MILLER, P. E.

THE District Conference for Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, will be held at Port Gibson, beginning October 12. Preachers in charge will please forward me the names of delegates and local preachers who will be in attendance.

E. H. MOSELEY.

THE District Conference for the Montgomery district, Alabama Conference, will meet in Auburn on Thursday, July 27. The opening sermon will be preached at eleven A. M. As the meeting embraces the fifth Sabbath, it is hoped the preachers will arrange to stay till the close.

M. S. ANDREWS, P. E.

WESLEY CHAPEL CAMP MEETING. A camp meeting will be held, commencing August 25 and lasting some eight days, at the camp ground one mile north of Woodville, Lincoln parish, La. Preachers are specially invited to attend.

FOLEY'S

Celebrated Gold Pens

AND PENCILS.

THE FINEST AND BEST.

OBITUARY.—To the clergy and all mercantile professions, and invention that will facilitate their labor is highly worthy of notice as well as of extensive patronage. One of the most important inventions of the present age is that of a pen that possesses the necessary qualities of firmness to mark and durability of use. Pre-eminently such are those of JOHN FOLEY, manufacturer of fine GOLD PENS AND PENCILS, No. 2 Astor House. Their superior excellence consists in the fact that there has been engaged in our employ for a long time the most skilful workmen in the trade, and every pen is carefully tested before it leaves the factory. We, the undersigned, who know the value of FOLEY'S PENS, from constant use of them for a number of years, cheerfully recommend them to those who wish for the best and most perfect Gold Pen ever made.

Signed by the following gentlemen and over one thousand others:

THE FARMER FEEDETH ALL.

BY CHARLES GODFREY LELAND.

My lord rides through the palace-gate,
My lady sweeps along in state,
The sage thinks long on many a thing,
And the maiden muses on marrying;
The minstrel harpeth merrily,
The sailor plows the foaming sea,
The huntsman kills the good red deer,
And the soldier wars without a fear;
But fall to each, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Smith hammereth cherry-red the sword,
Priest preacheth pure the holy word,
Dame Alice worketh braiding well,
Clerk Richard tales of love can tell;
The tapster sells her foaming beer,
Dan Fisher fisheth in the mere,
And cobblers rosin, strut and shine,
While pages bring the flagon wine,
But fall to each, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Man builds his castles fair and high,
Wheresoever river runneth by;
Great cities rise in every land,
Great churches show the builder's hand,
Great arches, monuments and towers,
Fair palaces and pleasing bowers;
Great work is done, be't here or there,
And well man worketh everywhere,
But work or rest, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

NEW YORK, July 21.—A dispatch ...camp of the Fifth Cavalry, ...Creek, July 19, via Cheyenne, ...20, says: Out of twenty-three ...ed Cheyennes belonging to the ...Cloud agency, all have gone ...h except about three hundred ...and children.

...ere has been a great demand for ...munition. The Indians have even ...ed a pony for thirty pounds of ...der.

...bout one hundred Indians were ...ded in Gen. Crook's fight on ...Rosebud in June, and they are ...distributed among their friends ...e agency.

...ere is much mourning for In... dians from that agency who were killed in that engagement.

The Indians acknowledge a loss of eighty-six killed in Gen. Crook's fight, and of about two hundred and eighty in Gen. Custer's fight.

Red Cloud armed and sent out a great many warriors to Sitting Bull, even taking the rations of beef, issued on the tenth, from women and children, to supply these warriors with something to eat on their march. Out of thirteen thousand Indians belonging to the agency, there are four thousand not present, and the agent is no longer able to deny that his Indians have mostly gone north to join Sitting Bull. Many wanted to go immediately after the sun dance of last June, but were restrained.

When the news of Gen. Custer's defeat came to them they began leaving at once in large and small parties, until now the Cheyennes are nearly all gone, and almost the entire fighting strength of the Sioux.

The post in White river canon has been withdrawn, as mail contractors are unable to get the mail carried from Fort Laramie to Red Cloud, and all mail for the troops there is sent in and out with a military escort. When Gen. Merritt's command returns from its present move it will proceed at once to join Gen. Crook. It will consist of the entire Fifth Cavalry, twelve companies, recruited to a good standard.

CHEYENNE, July 23.—A courier who left Goose Creek on the evening of the sixteenth instant arrived at Fort Fetterman to-night. His delay was caused by having met at Powder river a body of two hundred Indians, from whom he escaped by hiding himself in the timber for twenty-four hours. One Indian followed his trail nine miles. He says they were evidently waiting for him, and he fears that couriers who were sent from Fort Fetterman on the sixteenth instant with dispatches for Crook were intercepted, as he saw their trail this side the river, but not beyond.

His delay run him out of rations, compelling him to fast two days. He left all quiet in camp. Hostile Sioux are believed to be north of Goose Creek forty miles, and not far from the scene of the late massacre on Little Big Horn river. They have not fired into camp lately, nor attempted to burn it out, although the parched condition of grass renders this somewhat easy; at least animals may be robbed of their subsistence. The wagon train gives them a supply until October. The command moved seven miles north, on the day of the courier's departure, to another branch of Tongue river, near the fort of Big Horn mountains, where they will camp until the Fifth Cavalry, which leaves Fort Laramie on Monday next, reaches it about the fifth of August. Gen. Crook will make no aggressive movement until this event, when, if couriers whom he has dispatched to Gen. Terry, advising him to join him, succeed in reaching that command, he will have made a junction with Terry, and the next action will prove a decisive one. There is nothing that has not already been reported pertaining to Gen. Merritt's late engagement with the Cheyennes. The Indian killed by Buffalo Bill was named Yellow Hand, a young chief. The agent at Red Cloud admits that up to this date one thousand Sioux and twelve hundred Cheyennes have left that agency for the north, though all is quiet there now, and it is believed that no more will go. The stage to-night brought in $10,000 in dust from Dead Wood. Mr. Gardner, a reliable man, who has spent five weeks in traversing that region, intent on satisfying himself of its richness, reports that marvelous discoveries are being made, and fully $1,000,000 awaits safe transport. He saw in possession of Mr. Beary, of this city, one nugget weighing $117, and a number ranging from $3 to $15. He also brings seven hundred pounds of sample quartz for smelting.

FOREIGN.

VERSAILLES, July 19.—The Temps states that the six great powers are in daily communication relative to Eastern affairs, with a view of establishing a general agreement, so as to be in readiness to take advantage of any opportunity to exercise moral influence. It is understood that a general understanding of all the powers exists. The system of the exclusive agreement between the northern empires has apparently been abandoned.

BELGRADE, July 23.—Official advices, respecting fighting on the twentieth instant, at Beljinla, state that the Turks upon the retreat left a quantity of ammunition and arms. The Servians buried two hundred Turkish slain, and advanced their trenches closer to Beljinla. The Servian ministers of war and justice have proceeded to headquarters, on the Drina. Belgrade reserves have gone to the seat of war.

VIENNA, July 23.—Political Correspondence publishes a telegraphic account of the presentation of his credentials by Cabouti Pacha at St. Petersburg. He was treated with every distinction, but at the same time the Czar dwelt upon the state of affairs in Turkey in such a manner as to profoundly impress the Turkish minister, who withdrew visibly affected.

HAVANA, July 24.—Advices from Hayti, under date of the seventeenth, report business exceedingly dull. American silver is eight per cent. discount as against gold.

St. Domingo advices are to the effect that everything is quiet. The tobacco crop is just beginning to come in, and will be small. The market opened at fair prices.

From the Work.

MADISON STATION, MISS.—Mr. Editor: We close to-night a nine days' protracted meeting at Pearl River church, Madison circuit. The greater part of the time I was providentially hindered from being present; but the work, however, was most faithfully carried on by Rev. William B. Hines. Such a meeting has not been seen in this country for many years. The Holy Spirit was poured out abundantly, backsliders were reclaimed, the membership was revived, and numbers of sinners found peace with God. The results thus far have been thirty-eight accessions to the church—all by faith. I cannot close this brief communication without mentioning the active services rendered by the Revs. E. M. and E. A. Alford, local ministers upon this circuit. Rejoice with us that the Lord hath visited his people! Pray for us, that we continue faithful.

UNION SPRINGS DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA.—Mr. Editor: The Union Springs District Conference convened at Troy, Ala., on Thursday, the thirteenth instant, at nine o'clock A. M. The opening sermon, in the absence of Rev. Josiah Barker, to whom that duty had been assigned, was preached in the Methodist church, on Wednesday night, by the presiding elder, Rev. S. P. Richardson. At the very opening of the Conference a deep religious feeling was manifested. Nearly every charge was represented at the first roll-call.

The reports of the pastors and official members showed a gratifying progress in home religion and personal piety. The session was enlivened by a deeply interesting discussion upon the relation of baptized children to the church. A committee was appointed to prepare and report a paper upon this subject. This duty was performed in a most satisfactory manner. The document was ably and clearly drawn, and the secretaries were instructed to request its publication in the ADVOCATE.

On Friday reports of missionary and Sunday school operations came in very encouragingly. Already a large proportion of the missionary assessment has been raised, and assurances were given that the whole amount will be collected. The Sunday school literature was closely criticised, and the opinion seemed pretty general that it was deficient so far as the younger children are concerned. A committee was appointed to digest the subject, inquire and report a remedy for the evil complained of. It is more than likely that it consists in the lamentable and unpardonable want of interest on the part of parents in the right religious instruction of their children, and not so much in the character of the literature furnished by the Publishing House at Nashville. If parents would teach the lessons at home, children would find no difficulty in learning our catechisms, and the efforts of the faithful Sunday school teacher would meet with larger rewards.

Saturday was devoted to questions of finance, education and miscellaneous business. The preachers have been rather better supported, up to this meeting, than usual. Quarterage has come in in quantities sufficient to keep a little meal in the barrel and oil in the cruse. The prospects for good crops throughout the district are flattering, and both official members and preachers are confident that the assessments for the different demands of the church will be fully met. There is a marked and gratifying improvement in this direction throughout the district. The preacher and layman are getting nearer together in heart and sympathy. The distance between pulpit and pew is gradually lessening, and preacher and people are becoming more hearty co-laborers in the great work of saving souls. Resolutions were adopted by the lay members expressing their sympathy with the ministry in their arduous and self-sacrificing labors, and bidding them godspeed in their noble work.

The Conference finished its work late on Saturday afternoon. Its daily sessions were well attended by the intelligent citizens of the pleasant community in which it met. Preaching was had daily at eleven A. M. and at night. The congregations were large, serious and attentive. The church was greatly revived, and members often gave expression to their exuberant feelings in old-fashioned Methodist shouting. There were a number of mourners and several conversions. The meeting was protracted, and some of the brethren remained to assist the pastor in conducting it. The promise is that much good will be accomplished.

Bros. F. Law, J. H. Parks, J. A. Giddings and W. C. Menefee were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Rev. G. W. Barker and A. L. Wilson, reserves.

In the absence of a Bishop, Rev. S. P. Richardson, presiding elder, conducted the deliberations of the Conference with great acceptability. This is his last year on the district. He will leave it well organized and in excellent condition.

The citizens of Troy entertained the members with a generous hospitality, and richly deserved the vote of thanks tendered them by the Conference.

A District Conference in Oregon.

MR. EDITOR: The Willamette District Conference was held at Junction City, Ore. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. T. B. White, of Albany, on Thursday, June 15, at half-past seven o'clock P. M. On Friday, at nine o'clock A. M., the Conference was called to order. The presiding elder of the district being indisposed, Rev. E. G. Michael was elected president pro tem. Rev. T. B. White was elected secretary. Nearly all the pastors and a goodly number of the lay delegates were present.

The Conference resolved itself into a committee of the whole, and then proceeded to take up the several interests connected with the church, as specified in the Discipline. At the Friday afternoon session the presiding elder was in the chair, and presided over the Conference from thence to its close.

On the spiritual state of the church the brethren reported peace and harmony as reigning in our borders, and a firm and stable membership in the main. Some good meetings have been held. The net increase, however, is but small. There are many clever people and young persons in this country that are in sympathy with us, and yet they stand aloof, and will not unite with the church. This we greatly regret.

The finances of the preachers are by no means encouraging. The assessments made for them are low, ranging from $200 to $600. Receipts perhaps about one-third, and the year three-fourths gone. There is great complaint of hard times throughout this country. No doubt money is really scarce. A goodly number of our members and friends do about what they feel able to do to support the institutions of the church and the ministry, and yet it is not sufficient. The preachers are embarrassed, and hindered in their work to a greater or less degree. Some of them, we fear, will be driven to the wall so far as to force them to look in some other direction, or turn their attention to secular employment, for a support for themselves and families.

Crops here this season are very backward, owing to the exceedingly wet winter and spring. The young grain is now looking well, and we are still having showers, which makes the prospect for a good crop favorable. A good crop and fair prices are necessary in order to save the people of Oregon. Many of them are in debt, and liable to be broken up unless relief comes soon. Of course when the agricultural portion of a community is behind, and pressed in their finances, all trades and professions must suffer; and the church, as well as the whole people, forgetful of the source from whence their help cometh, are almost sure to commence to economize at the house of the Lord. Hence this land of peace and plenty, this sheen of rainbows and flowers, "as you have heard," has another and a dark side. It has its long, wet, dreary season—say six months of the year—and drudgery and hardship, especially for women, the year round. Newcomers and preachers have but little showing here unless they have considerable means. We have some members in our church, however, that are faithful and true, and other friends who are not members. The difficulty is that they are too few and far between.

Religious services were made prominent throughout the meeting—preaching at eleven o'clock A. M. and at night. On Saturday, at the forenoon service, we had a time of great power. Nearly every one in the house was moved by the Holy Spirit. Christians wept and rejoiced.

On Sunday morning our annual experience meeting was one of almost unusual interest. The brethren and sisters spoke freely and feelingly of the goodness of God to them, and of the fond hopes and bright prospects which they were enabled to cherish.

On Sunday at eleven o'clock the congregation was large, attentive and serious. At the close of the sermon some sixty persons came forward and received the holy communion, amid tears and earnest prayers. Christians were happy in the Savior's love. It was a high-day in our Zion. The meeting closed on Monday night with a fine state of feeling.

Different denominations were well represented on the occasion. All seemed to enter heartily into the spirit of it. Indeed we as Christians felt and realized that we all drank into that one spirit, and that Christ was all and in all. How pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. Here destiny, as it were, has cast our lot. Here we have consented and determined to wield the sword of the Spirit against sin and the powers of darkness. Here in this field of labor and conflict we expect to live, here we expect to die. Give us your sympathies and prayers, brethren, that we may abide our time with courage and patience, enduring hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, our Savior.

Respectfully,

N. M. SKIPWORTH,
Chairman.

Can the Time be Changed?

Can't the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences be changed to meet at later dates?

The Mississippi Conference is anxious to meet on the thirteenth of December, which is its regular time, according to the programme adopted at the late General Conference. The financial condition of the country, and of the preachers demand it. If we meet November 29, as the Bishops have planned, we will be losers, financially, in salaries, collections, for Bishops, missions and the Conference claimants—$6 000 at least, I think. Bishop Wightman says he cannot change to any date but December 27. That is too late for us in Mississippi. But as the Louisiana Conference has been meeting in January for several years past, can they not consent to take that time and let Mississippi have December 13? Now let us hear from the presiding elders of that Conference on this proposition. Speak out as soon as you can.

How a Printer Talked.

I was in an editor's office the other day when a printer came in for copy. A large roll of manuscript was presented him by the acting editor, written in pencil.

His eye and face gave an expression of fury as he exclaimed: "Well, if I was an editor, all such stuff as that would go into the waste basket."

"Why so?" I inquired, as it was a personal friend of mine who had sent the document.

"Because," said he, "it is written in pencil! Now if a printer could hold the paper with both hands, so as to get the right shade of light on it, it could be read. But as it must lay on this desk he is compelled to strain his eyes for hours trying to make out what would have been easily read had it been written in ink. Besides," he continued, "the document has been delayed in the postoffice, because the author did not pay enough postage, until it is too late for publication in this week's paper. So it must lay over until next week." Then he went on to say how the editor was imposed upon every week by the carelessness of correspondents for the paper not paying the proper amount of postage. His loss amounted to many dollars annually as the result.

I was sorry my friend's communication had to lie over, as it was news of importance; but I turned away from the mad typo somewhat wiser for my "Peep Behind the Curtain."

I resolved hereafter to write for the paper in black ink, in a round, full hand. Also that I would weigh all doubtful letters and pay full postage. I also felt sure of another thing, viz: It would be much better to keep the printer in a good humor with you, as well as the editor, for he has much to do with the time, style, and space your article is to occupy in the paper. Hoping this hint may be of use to newspaper correspondents, I am,

Very respectfully, J. B. W.
Methodist Recorder.

Vernon Parish, La.

HOLLY GROVE, VERNON PARISH,
July 4, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking that events in Vernon parish may be interesting to some of your local readers, I take the liberty of grouping the following items on the condition of affairs on the West Fork of Amnicco. Corn is doing finely, and looks healthy and flourishing. The ratio in cultivation exceeds that of previous years. Cotton is doing very well, but the influence of Grange No. 250 has been exercised effectually in securing a material deduction from the acreage formerly devoted to its production, and the consequence is that, from present indications, this fall will find the people of the section above alluded to abundantly supplied with everything necessary for the support and comforts of rural life.

Considerable attention has been given the cultivation of rice, potatoes and tobacco, and the tanning of leather, and the people have commenced to practice a resolution to regulate future plans by fostering home industries, developing native resources, and exerting themselves to increase local wealth. The moral tone of this community is excellent. A singing school has been in operation for five months. Mr. Owens has a monthly appointment at Holly Grove church. The people are all church members, and the voice of prayer and the melody of domestic praise goes up from many a family altar. Religious sentiments, thus early fixed, become deeply seated in the soul, diffusing a sober dignity and pious composure over the deportment of even the children. Their very language is pure and guarded, and free from all gross and irreverent expressions.

The grange is entitled to great credit for its success in promoting feelings of mutual interest in the Patrons regarding each other's prosperity. Ever ready to co-operate in the advancement of any laudable undertaking, they have just established a school under their auspices, and secured the services of a competent teacher, Holly Grove church, where the school is taught, is a large, roomy building, thirty-four by forty feet.

I had the pleasure of attending a social gathering to-day, the centennial anniversary of our national existence and independence. Elsewhere the day may have been more magnificently commemorated, but by no means more enthusiastically than here. We had a speech from Mr. John Franklin on our national progress, the necessity of educating the rising generation, and urging the assembled youths to emulate the illustrious departed of our country. Mr. C. F. Conerly followed in a forcible appeal to young men to embrace present opportunities, and to lay the foundation of future greatness in an ambition to excel in intellectual attainments, and moral and mental cultivation. Rev. A. Wright closed in a pleasant delineation of the early obscurity, subsequent trials and ultimate triumph of the great philosopher, Ben. Franklin.

An abundant supply of everything desirable in the culinary line, including fish and venison, next demanded attention. As all were permitted to participate in this part of the day's exercises, we put aside our reservation, and, though declining to take any stock in the "public speaking," we began a lively pilgrimage to the tables, and volunteered to accommodate the ladies with our services in clearing them away.

W. S. W.

Washington left an estate valued at over $800,000; John Adams died moderately well off, leaving about $75 000; Jefferson died so poor that if Congress had not purchased his library at $20 000 he would have died a pauper; Madison was frugal, and left about $150,000; Monroe died so poor that he was buried at the expense of his relatives; John Quincy Adams left about $75,000; Jackson died worth about $80 000; Van Buren left some $400,000; It is said he did not draw his salary while in office, but at the expiration of his term of service drew the whole $100 000; Polk left an estate valued at $150,000; Taylor had saved something from his pay while in the army, and died worth $150 000; Tyler married a lady of wealth; Fillmore was always frugal, and added to his savings by marrying a lady of wealth, and was worth about $200,000; Pierce's estate was valued at $50 000; Buchanan left $200,000; Lincoln left $75,000; and Johnson $50,000.

Real holiness has love for its essence, humility for its clothing, the good of others as its employment, and the honor of God as its end.

A CRYSTAL.

BY B. G.

I hold the precious thing in reverent hand,
For centuries it lay in soundless night,
Locked fast in the inexorable night
Of rocks. Yet its imperious demand
Drew down rich life from all the world land
Wrought shape surpassed not by the utmost height
Of sculptor's skill.
Set free, it takes the light
As it were fashioned from the light's own strands,
And shoots its beam of color like a star.
In reverent hands I hold the precious thing,
And, thinking of a soul I know, would say,
If I might dare, how lonely and afar
From light of love, like crystal pure, it grew,
Then in the light of love flashed clear and true.

Dr. Renfroe vs. Methodism.

MR. EDITOR: In the Alabama Baptist of July 6 Dr. Renfroe makes another desperate effort to dispose of his "whale." As other means failed, he now tries personal vituperation. I am sorry that the doctor is so nervous that he can't bear to have his own wit turned against him. He ought to have measured the capacity of his pool before he decided to go "whaling." I admired the pleasantry and "turned the tables on him," so he loses his equilibrium and comes back with a tirade of personal flings. We hope the doctor will keep cool. He has gone a "fishing" with the wrong tackling again, if he now proposes to run his "whale" ashore by provoking me to descend to such a mode of warfare as that. I never come down to impugn a man's motives, but deal with his words. I never stoop to ridicule his personal appearance or the style of his dress, but deal with his written thoughts and the "much-about" style in which they are clothed. In this sense, and in this sense alone, have I been personal in this controversy, as I so clearly demonstrated in my last article. The reader will readily draw the distinction between dealing with a man's "words," and ridiculing the style of his "coat."

As the doctor has so persistently tried to impugn my motives, or "purposes," I will say this: I put him to record because I saw that he had over-reached himself in his bold attack upon "Methodist Records," and I "circulated" this record because the people could judge best with the record before them. Now why does the doctor complain so heavily about "the people of Talladega" seeing what he has written about the Methodists? He "has lived here nineteen years"—I am "a new-comer;" "this people are not easily duped;" he has all the advantage of me in this locality. Why, then, all this ado of these papers being "circulated here?" Who can tell?

The doctor says: "Mr. Boland has, with his personalities [?] and circulars, introduced and localized among the people of Talladega a controversy, which, so far as local, belonged to a community one hundred and fifty miles away." How so? I simply copied and published in the Nashville Advocate, what Dr. Renfroe had first published in the Alabama Baptist, at Marion. Which is the nearest to Talladega—Marion or Nashville? But why does he object to "the people of Talladega" knowing what he said "one hundred and fifty miles away," especially as we gave his own account of it?

The doctor goes on to say: "When the encounter between the circuit-rider and the agent was brought to a close, Mr. Boland caught up the dispute and made it his own." Now in the doctor's second article, of May 18, we find this language: "Some one has sent us an article written by Rev. Mr. Gillis, the circuit-rider in reply to Dr. Renfroe's first article of March 16. Sent to us, we suppose, by Rev. J. M. Boland, of Talladega, as his name is on the margin (of the paper.) . . . And now as others seem to be interesting themselves in this matter, we wish to add that we have no objection to being held responsible for everything that we said in our centennial discourses in Alabama, or for what we have written on this subject;" nevertheless "we shall have our net spread for larger fish than Mr. Gillis, and shall hereafter allow him to escape with the minnows." So it turns out that the doctor did not even propose to let the "Butler minnow" go until he saw a chance, as he thought, to "spread his net for larger fish;" and he invited me to the contest by saying that he "had no objection to being held responsible for everything he had written"—even that terrible onslaught upon Methodist Records, of March 16.

Now when I took my pen to the gentleman I merely referred to the "local controversy, so far as it was local," and passed on to notice that part of his first article which was not "local," but referred to the entire State of Alabama and the entire Methodist Church. I made the point then that the doctor had "shifted the responsibility" of the "local controversy, so far as it was local," by turning the "local" part over to "Bro. Skinner, of Pineapple," but that he had renewed the attack, through the columns of the Alabama Baptist, not only upon the circuit-rider, but also upon the entire Methodist Church. So we took our pen to the doctor just where he said that "a controversy all over Alabama might be unpleasant, but it would make the endowment of Howard College a grand success," and "we will say, for the benefit of others, that the best thing Methodists can do in this centennial year is to lie low and keep dark," etc. (It was thus we showed, in the agent's own language, that he proposed to get up a controversy all over Alabama.) Now I thought Talladega was located in Alabama, and "in my simplicity" I supposed that the Methodists in Talladega were included in the warning for "Methodists to lie low and keep dark"! If the doctor had intended to except the "kind Methodists of Talladega" he ought to have said so, especially when he saw "some of them interesting themselves in this matter." But no; he "spread his net" at once for these "larger fish," and lo! he "caught the Talladega whale," and the reader knows the result!

That the "Methodists of Talladega have been very kind" to Dr. Renfroe we have no doubt; they have that name everywhere, but "if his kindly relations with the Methodists are broken up, Mr. Boland must not be held responsible for it"—no, never. Because Methodists have let a great deal "pass without notice," that is no reason why they should become a foot-ball, because "the Methodists in Talladega have been very kind to" Dr. Renfroe, "and stood by him and his, in sickness and death," that is no reason why they should fly to their hiding-places when he advises them to "lie low and keep dark," and because Dr. Renfroe "has been intimate with several of the Methodist pastors here," and I am "a newcomer," that is no reason why I should hunt a bomb-proof, when he threatens to "shell the Methodist woods."

The doctor says that my charge that he had "made an attack on Methodism in the pulpit and through the press" is "entirely untrue." How is that for a "Christian spirit?" Fortunately for us, we put the doctor to record on these points in his own language, and then "circulated it" this record among the people, and we are willing for the people to decide the point of veracity which he has raised. See in his article of June 1, where he admits that he had used the pulpit at "Ebenezer and scores of other places in Alabama;" such "views" as "in his judgment are rapidly alienating and tending to supplant infant baptism." And where he said, in his first article, that Methodists have a record that will not do for exhibition".

The doctor is elated because I admit that "Methodists were in the State Church," etc., before they cut loose from it and organized the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1784. Well, that is right. I never deny a well-evident fact. But the fun is all found in the fact that Dr. Renfroe is trying to hold the Methodist of to-day responsible for what took place before the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized! Here is the place for the doctor's poetical quotation:

"To laugh would seem like a want of grace,
But to be grave exceeds all power of face."

But I am tired of such quibbling. If the doctor felt bound to apologize to the readers of the Alabama Baptist for writing such twaddle as the first two or three columns of his last article, and felt bound to rise to explain in the same paper, how much more should I apologize for having noticed it at all?

At last the doctor undertakes to examine our record again. He first introduces Mr. Wesley's "Calm Address to the American Colonies."

After a few extracts he remembers that this was not only before the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized, but "that Mr. Wesley was a subject of Great Britain, and was loyal to his king." So the doctor leaves Mr. Wesley and "spreads his net" for a Bishop. But why leave Mr. Wesley so abruptly? Did the doctor find that other letter Mr. Wesley wrote about the same time, to the premier, Lord North, and to the secretary of the colonies, Lord Dartmouth, in which he "remonstrated against the war and plead for the Americans!" This is a long letter and full of statesmanlike counsel, and shows that whatever Mr. Wesley's views may have been in regard to a republican form of government as contrasted with that of England's (the point he discussed in his "Calm Address,") yet on the abstract question of the American war Mr. Wesley did wield his trenchant pen, with the highest officers, in defense of the rights of the colonies! Did ever any Baptist do as much? Mr. Wesley says: "These, an oppressed people, asked for nothing more than their legal rights, and that in the most modest and inoffensive manner the nature of the thing would allow. But, waiving this, waiving all considerations of right and wrong, I ask: Is it common sense to use force toward the Americans?" (Taken from Lord North's copy—see appendix to Smith's History of Methodism, volume I.)

Now if Dr. Renfroe wanted to bring out "truth," instead of misrepresenting a great and good man, he was bound by all the laws of fair dealing to give enough of what Mr. Wesley wrote on the American war to show his true position, or else not quote him at all. But what does Dr. Renfroe know about Mr. Wesley's writings when he had to go to "Methodist Episcopacy, by Hamill and Henderson," to get even one little quotation from Mr. Wesley?

But, not satisfied with having thus misrepresented Mr. Wesley on the American war, the doctor takes it upon himself to stir the pool of slander, and fish up the writings of Alex. McCaine against Episcopal Methodism—the foulest specimens of billingsgate ever published against any church since the Reformation—and from this source the doctor peddles out second-handed slander against Bishop Asbury, one of the purest and most useful men that ever made a track on this continent. Now Dr. Renfroe knows, or ought to know, that McCaine, when he wrote the book from which he quotes, was an ambitious, disappointed renegade from Episcopal Methodism, also the most bitter and implacable enemy, and reckless and irresponsible writer that ever wrote against the Methodist Episcopal Church; all of which may be seen by reading Dr. John Emory's "Defense of our Fathers Against Rev. Alex. McCaine and Others." Dr. Emory shows that "for malignity of purpose, shrewd cunning, misrepresentation of facts and misstatement of circumstances and dates, Alex. McCaine had no compeer, except the far-famed Cobbett, who wrote a so-called History of the Reformation." So terrible was Dr. Emory's expose of McCaine's slanderous falsehoods against Bishop Asbury and his so-called "Tory Conference," etc., that McCaine's book has never "wiggled" since, except when McCaine himself, or some peddler of second-handed billingsgate, has sputted it out and used it to "shell Methodist woods," or to slander the immortal Asbury and his coadjutors. And I am pained to see that Dr. Renfroe made his threat to "shell the woods" with his eye on this magazine of falsehoods; and when we "forced him" to make good his charge against Methodist Records he loads up with McCaine's old exploded shells, and runs around to another column of the paper and cries: "They have forced the issue!" I am not now dealing with the style of Dr. Renfroe's "coat," but with published facts and records that are to be examined.

When I saw the doctor's terrible threat to "shell the woods," and "those Methodist Records," I knew he literally that the Methodist "denomination would let it pass unnoticed." I knew, further, that he could not find a single "shell" in any published history to throw into our "woods;" and I did not believe then that a man a minister, who had been "treated so kindly by Methodists," would stoop to drag up slanders and falsehoods that have been met and exposed so long ago that the books which contain them have died of their own corruption. But in this I was mistaken. No wonder the doctor complains so heavily of me for not "lying low and keeping dark," and for handling these documents around. No man would like to look "kind Methodists" in the face every day when he had proposed to "shell their woods" with such "fire" as that which McCaine furnished him. When his own brethren warned him that his centennial speeches would "get upon a controversy all over the State," he might have taken warning; but "no," said he, "nobody will call us in question;" "other denominations will let it pass unnoticed;" "a controversy all over the State might be unpleasant in some respects, but it would make the endowment of Howard College a grand success;" "the best thing Methodists can do this centennial year, is to lie low and keep dark," etc. Who "forced" the doctor to say all this?

As "a new-comer" in this community, I have no doubt it looked rather rash to the centennial agent for me to presume to disregard his advice to "lie low and keep dark;" but I have simply performed a Christian duty in defending the "sainted dead," as well as three millions of living Methodists, from the foul aspersions of a peddler in second-handed billingsgate. Hereafter, when Dr. Renfroe proposes to "shell Methodist woods," the people may know that he is talking about second-handed "shells," that have been exploded long ago!

Here we take leave of the doctor until he learns how to treat an opponent according to the rules of honorable debate, and until he produces authorities for his charges against Methodists who have some claim upon the world. As the doctor began this debate and invited me to the contest, I am entitled, by all the laws of controversy, to the last reply; but if the doctor is going to contend for the "last look," the field is now before him—he can write ad libitum. It is to be hoped, however, that before "the Bishop shall conclude that Mr. Boland's services will be more useful at some other point" the doctor will cool off, so that I may turn him over to my successor in a better humor than the language of his last article exhibits.

J. M. BOLAND.

A CAMP MEETING SCENE.

The crowds went to the place of prayer—
A quiet, cool retreat,
Away from the din of business, where Saints sought the mercy seat.

And many kind friends of Carl
With hearts of gladness came
To tell of all his love to them,
And bless his holy name.

The youthful, too, were there, whose souls
Had tasted of his grace,
And oft before had met with him
In some such sacred place.

The songs of Zion, pealing high,
Rang sweetly on the air,
And meek and lowly ones were heard
Pouring out fervent prayer.

And they, the called and chosen ones,
Undubbed of God and sin,
In Jesus' name besought with tears
Poor sinners to repent.

Their world was in the Spirit's hand,
Subduing to the heart
And many lost and ruined souls
Were brought with him to part.

Around the sligr mourning ones
Most humbly bowed their down
Beseeching God to bless their souls
And turn away his frown.

While wrestling thus in fervent prayer,
And shedding bitter tears,
Jehovah, in the holy place,
In mercy pleased to hear,
Poured out his Holy Spirit
Converting, saving power;
And many tested of his love
In Heaven shall happy be.

A mild that circling crowd was on
Each beautiful and young;
Her form was fair, and bright her eye,
Her step was firm and strong.

Upon her lovely brow there sat
Angelic sweetness throned;
Her voice in melody upraised
To sounds of heaven tuned.

And as she heard the words of love
Who told of Jesus' love,
A blessed smile sat on her face,
Like that of those above.

And when they sung of glory in Immortal agonic hymn,
The rich sweet tones of Agnes rose
Like those of seraphim.

Remembering him who died for her
His passion to record,
So meekly bowed, and sweet was Communion with her Lord.

Oh, surely she was happy then!
Far happier than they
Who have the joys of earth and sin
And seek them night and day.

That scene with joy I'll linger o'er
So full the soul of earth
The proud were humbled, sorrows
And scoffers ceased their mirth.

Long will remembrance of that
Be cherished in my heart
And may we meet, when toils are past,
Where Christians never part.

There throughout long eternity
Redeeming love to praise;
And hand and tongue and mighty the Lord
Wondrous in all his ways.

Greensboro Female College, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed our second academic year. It has been a delightfully pleasant one. We have numbered about seventy pupils, and look for a considerable accession next year. The music department, under Prof. Philippe Henle, of Baltimore, has proven a complete success.

The commencement sermon, delivered in the Methodist church, last Sabbath, by Rev. D. D. Sanderson, of Eutaw, Ala., was characterized by his usual terse, forcible style—not a superfluous word. It will make a lasting impression for good upon our pupils.

Mrs. M. B. B. Stafford, the widow of the late Prof. Stafford, of the University of Alabama, who is said to be equal, if not superior to any teacher of young ladies in the South, has greatly aided us by her wonderful administrative capacity, her life-long experience, and her highly refined and elegant manners.

THOS. WARD WHITE,
President.

JUNE 30, 1876.

We are never so well inclined to believe in a stroke of good fortune as when one has just been dealt to us.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

DIED, at his residence in the town of Providence, Carroll parish, La., after a severe illness, WILLIAM MAGUIRE, in the fifty-fourth year of his age.

The subject of this memoir was born in the county Farmanagh, Ireland. Unlike the greater portion of his countrymen, he was a Protestant, reared in the Episcopal faith. In 1818 he came to Providence, and adopted it as his home, accumulating some property, and identifying himself with American interests and institutions.

In the year 1854 he was married to Lizzie A. Price, of Stark county, O., and at his death left this loving consort to survive him, with four children. About the year 1859 he moved to West Virginia, not returning to Providence until after the war had ended in 1865. After his removal to Providence he was prosperous in business, and at his decease left his family in independent circumstances.

William Maguire had his faults, which were prominent and observable. But at his death they were, even by his enemies, forgotten, and, as it were, "in the deep bosom of the ocean buried."

He had shining virtues, which we remember, and they beam with brilliant scintillations, throwing a sheet of light over all his faults, causing a halo to glow on the character of the dead. Only by the contrast of these virtues do we see, in memory, the deceased, as when among us he stemmed life's uneven current. He was a kind, indulgent, forbearing husband, and a devoted, loving parent.

When William Maguire was a friend he was faithful to the last, never forsaking; and when others forsook you he was your best friend. To one in distress, his heart responded in sympathy, and with friendly hand would divide his last dollar.

Having come to Providence in the years so long gone, he was among the very few remaining survivors of those times, and stood on as one of the old landmarks—connecting the past with the present in the past.

While he was in Virginia the question arose for him to display the most striking attributes of his impulsive nature. The question presented was: Will you aid the great North, backed by the government, and all the treasury, armies and navy, or will you link your fate with the South, sink in money, arms and men, but brave in spirit, and struggling for independence from their mother government? Maguire had adopted the South as his home, and at the call of the Confederacy the responded, and under the stars and bars he went forth to the battle. He went out early in 1861, and attached himself to a cavalry command under Gen. Imboden. It was his fate to be over at the front, meeting dangers and perils, and often hair-breadth escapes from death. In every charge of the command he was foremost in the conflict, and from an unknown quarter, some foe from, he raised himself by Parkyrnd gentleman. In early November, 1861, Maguire was quartered within the weak walls of Fort Delaware, found rest until he was exchanged.

A. TAYLOR.

SILAS DOUGLASS, son of Abel Douglass, was born in Granville county, N. Carolina, 1788; was married to Miss Mary Harrington in 1810, he and his young wife both were converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1812, in which they lived and died in the faith of the Gospel. She died in [illegible] 1856, and he on the twenty-fifth of March, 1857.

Being deeply impressed of right and religion, they were decided men. Consequently, he regarded church members as living in the fulfillment and consequent separation from the world and its fashions thereof, and fully and heartily co-operating with the church in her discipline and submission to the will of the Lord. Therefore, while living in North Carolina, he gave liberally his means in building churches and camp grounds, as well as to support the ministry and institutions of the Church. In the office of class-leader he felt in his power to instruct and encourage the young in the church. His name and works will live long in the old North State.

In the early part of 1837 he moved to Alabama, and settled near Orion, in Pike county. In this county and state he lived for fourteen years; then broke up housekeeping and traveled extensively, attending meetings and visiting and living with his children. During his stay in Alabama he was the same devoted and true Methodist and earnest Christian. By his untiring energy and unconquerable zeal the Douglass camp ground was built in 1856, located by Mr. Troy, and Orion, Pike county, Ala. This was the beginning of camp meetings after the war. In this State he was an active, zealous [illegible] in his office he accomplished a vast deal of good.

By the consistency, purity and beauty of his Christian life he early and savingly impressed all his children [illegible]. All his children are on the way to heaven, except those now there. Three of his sons are Methodist preachers, and one grandson was Rev. A. Stacy Douglass, now in heaven.

During his last sickness he was so fully and abundantly happy at times as to forget his pains. He died in great peace and strong assurance, in Escambia county, Ala., March 25, 1876. He leaves his second wife, a devoted Christian, numerous relatives, and hosts of friends to mourn his departure from earth, but to rejoice at his reception into heaven.

JANE BRADLEY was born November 7, 1837, and died in Coweeta county, Ala., May 7, 1876.

She was converted some years before her death, and soon thereafter connected herself with the Methodist Church, in whose communion she ever remained an humble and steadfast worshiper. She loved the church of her choice; and more especially its ministers of her church did she, in her unostentatious way, manifest much interest. Truly the pastor, with many others, will miss Sister Bradley. Her religion, though not demonstrative, was pure and sincere, and characterized by gentleness and purity of intention. The hand of affliction was laid heavily upon her for some years, and for the last few years her illness was of a very severe character indeed; but she patiently endured it all as the will of her heavenly Father, bearing with meekness her extreme suffering, and expressing her confidence in that Savior in whom she had confided.

She frequently expressed herself, during the latter part of her sickness, as willing and ready, and at times anxious to depart, but before she died she remarked to those who stood around watching the dissolution of nature: "It is all right." Truthfully it may be said: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." She leaves four children and a kind husband to mourn her loss.

JAMES S. REYNOLDS.

WE, your committee appointed to prepare an obituary of our worshipful brother, MARK MCALPIN, beg leave to submit the following:

It has pleased the almighty God to remove from our midst our beloved brother and worshipful master, who has been long and favorably known as a good citizen, an affectionate husband and a kind parent. He removed from Mississippi to this State with his family and was married to Miss [illegible] Smart, daughter of Nathan and Lucy Smart, with whom he spent many happy years; but, alas! he is gone. He was a representative of this parish, and was also elected on his return home from the Legislature. He lived only a few days after his arrival home, and died March 31, 1876, leaves a wife and eleven children, with a kind friends, to mourn their loss.

Resolved, That in his death we feel a great loss, and in token of respect to our deceased brother and worshipful master we wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days during which time our lodge be draped in mourning.

Resolved, That we hereby tender to the bereaved family our fullest sympathy and fraternal condolence.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our lodge, a copy be furnished his family, and also be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Baptist Messenger.

SISTER LYDIA A. N. LONG, wife of N. A. Long, and daughter of [illegible] Elizabeth T. Marshall, was born in [illegible] county, Ala., July 16, 1831. During the year 1851 she, together with her parents, moved to Dale county, of the same State, where she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, but did not realize the pardoning grace and joy of salvation till 1855. From this time till called to the church above her life was a demonstration of the fact of her conversion. In 1856 she, with husband and children, moved to Stewart county, Ga.; thence, to 1874, to Sumter county, Ala., where she died in great triumph, February 3, 1876.

She was a faithful child, a loving sister, devoted wife, an affectionate mother and obliging neighbor. As a Methodist she was true in doctrine and faithful in practice, adorned the beautiful land of eternal flowers, and enjoys the beautiful land of eternal bloom. She left to mourn her mother, one brother, three sisters and two dear children. She has a father, brothers, sisters, dear husband, children, and many other relatives and friends, to meet her in heaven. Two of her brothers are preachers of the gospel in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We trust all may meet in heaven.

AGNES DOWNS.

DIED, near Bryan, Texas, May 1, 1876, Mrs. ELIZA A. SEELY, wife of Mr. Seely, and daughter of Rev. Elisha Dobson, deceased. Reared in the bosom of the church, in early life she united with it, lived and died in the faith of the gospel.

From childhood she was the heir of grace, which by divine grace chastened, refined her, and made her Christian character shine more brightly.

She was ever good to all, and was possessed of a meek and quiet spirit—patient in tribulation, uncomplaining in her sufferings, and always resigned to the will of God. Death to her was gain, and her death were instructive and her lessons to all who knew her.

EMMA LILLIE, only child of Bro. S. and Sarah A. Rayner, was born June 18, 1868, and died June 6, 1876.

I am glad to say that I often meet the little one bears her talk. She was remarkably bright, possessed a sweet disposition, and was always cheerful when well. Those who knew her best loved her most. She was here lent a short time, to cheer the home of her parents till the Lord saw fit to transfer her to a better country, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more.

JOHN D. HAMILTON.

ROBERT DAVIS COWAN, only child of J. D. and M. A. E. Cowan, was born in Hoboken, Marengo county, Ala., March 27, 1857, and died May 23, 1876. Thus the record reveals himself. Many of his works are indeed marvelous to us. We cannot see through the narrow channel of our own physics all his dealings with "the children of men." He touches the tender bud and it withers; his breath fans across the young heart and it is motionless, and none can account for the action.

EN. E. COWAN.

The most natural beauty in the world is honest and natural. True features make the beauty of face, and true proportions the beauty of architecture; as true measure that of harmony and music. In all which is all table; truth is still perfection.—Shaftesbury.

THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1876.

HYMN.

ANATOLIUS (A. D. 458,) BISHOP OF CONSTANTINOPLE EIGHT YEARS.

Fierce was the wild billow;
Dark was the night;
Oars labor'd heavily;
Faint glimmer'd white;
Trembled the mariners;
Peril was nigh;
Then said the God of God:
"Peace! It is I!"

Ridge of the mountain-wave,
Lower thy crest!
Wall of Enroclydon,
Be thou at rest!
Sorrow can never be—
Darkness must fly—
When saith the Light of Light:
"Peace! It is I!"

Jesus, Deliverer!
Come thou to me;
Soothe thou my voyaging
Over life's sea!
Then, when the storm of death
Roars, sweeping by,
Whispers, O Truth of Truth:
"Peace! It is I!"

The Spurgeon Family.

While we do not accept, without mental reservation the aphorism that "blood always tells," we cannot but hint that there is a connection, while it may be, and possibly not always uniform in operation, between characteristics of ancestry and descendants. "The generation of the right" may not always "be blessed" and the "children's children" may not always inherit the spirit of their fathers; but, nevertheless, the rule seems to be that piety counts for something, and that purity at the fountain must make for purity along the stream. As George Eliot says in Spanish Gypsey:

"But, shall the trick of nostrils and of lips
Ascend through generations, and the soul
That moves within our frame like God to work—
Creating, urging, willing, withering—
Shall no record, leave no documents
For great history?"

This principle is illustrated and confirmed in the history of the Spurgeon family, which we desire here to emphasize, not simply because of the interest which attaches to the name of its most distinguished member, but because of the homily it points, and the example it presents.

Tradition represents this family as escaping from the Netherlands during the persecution of Alva, the Spanish ruler, and seeking the shores of England, for the enjoyment of some degree of religious freedom. This first appearance of the now famous name "Spurgeon" is in connection with the great Protestant faith and its trials. But the forefathers of the illustrious preacher did not even find England a bed of roses. We find in the annals of Essex, the county where they settled, of an arrest made in 1677 of certain dissenters, some of whom were fined and others imprisoned, among whom was one John Spurgeon, a man of God, in humble body, but mighty in faith. While the connection between this saint and the present pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle is not as clear as we could desire, it is well known that the great grandfather was a pious man, and his grandfather, Rev. James Spurgeon, an Independent minister. This preacher was pastor of one parish, at Stambourne, for more than half a century. In his day he was very popular, people coming from all the adjacent villages to hear him. He seems to have been a brave, quaint, talented man—a far-reaching man—a man of large heart, which he covered with a large waistcoat having large pockets, which he regularly filled with peppermints and other candies, and which he as regularly emptied, to the delight of the children whom he met during his evening rambles.

Rev. John Spurgeon, the father of the London divine, was the second son of a family of ten, and was born at Stambourne some sixty-three years ago. He is about six feet in height, rather stout, possessed of a large head, and is distinguished for definiteness and originality of sermons. He naturally feels a great pride in his sons, and sometimes expresses his 'amazement' at the marvels God has wrought through the "boy of forty summers." The father, as well as the father, is an independent, and is a very decided but comfortable-looking woman. Being Pedo-Baptists, it is natural that the parents should have been a little disappointed at their offspring departing from their denominational laws. But without an exception the children went over to the Baptists. James Spurgeon suggests that his infants were somewhat like the hen who hatched duck's eggs, and could not understand their taking to the water as they did. It is likewise reported that Mrs. Spurgeon once said to her son: "Ah, Charley, I have often prayed that you might be saved, my boy, but never that you should become a Baptist." "Then," said the preacher, with a peculiar smutty twinkle in his eye, "God has answered your prayer, mother, and, with his usual bounty, given you more than you asked."

Of the London minister it is not necessary that we here write particularly. He is known by his published discourses to the majority of American Christians, and some of our readers have enjoyed alike his ministry and his personal acquaintance. But we would note with peculiar satisfaction that the succession of faith is unbroken, his two sons having embraced the blessed Savior. These young men, now about twenty years of age, are twins. The news of their faith was carried to their father, who was at the time before his congregation, and he greeted it with a quotation from Dr. Watts: "Not more than others I deserve, yet God has given me more." More, indeed, for they are both pious and amiable young brethren; and although, as it considered good, they have no wish to enter the ministry, they are doing excellent service for the Master, both in regard to winning souls from sin and rescuing lives from intemperance. They are total abstinence men, and recently addressed with good effect a large audience in London on the evils of that one vice, which has spread to so alarming an extent throughout England.

May the mercy of God to this family can be matched in our own country. Instances could be multiplied of the divine faithfulness in blessing the descendants of the upright. Let us, then, take courage, and believe that our Christ-life cannot be in vain; yea, let us believe in the words which comforted the heart of Monica in the olden times: "The child of many prayers can never perish."

Call to the Ministry.

But the young man may ask—suppose he has these convictions—What shall I do? Shall I earnestly beseech the church to give me license to preach? Shall I talk of my call to the ministry, and try to press in, and ask for work? I say: By no means. My advice to every young man is: As long as God confines the conviction to his own heart let him keep it a secret there. He need not tell it. Let him have no anxiety about it; if God has a work for him he will open the door; there will be other indications, other calls beside the inner call. As long as this call is personal let the young man say: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth;" let him listen; let him wait. If this conviction be upon him, let him seek an education, prepare himself; let him struggle to get into harmony with his great life-work. It may be this inner conviction for years; he may never suppose it known to any other being. When God calls the young man he will call him, as I believe, outwardly. Whenever I see a young man anxious to have license to preach, and beg the church to put him into the ministry, I take it for granted that the young man does not understand either his own heart or what is the call of God to his work. The men that are anxious to preach, and appealing for liberty to preach, are the men that God never called to preach.

How, then, shall the man know further? I answer: As God calls him inwardly, God, through his church, calls him outwardly. By and by a friend with whom he is in close relations will suggest to him: "Has not God some work for you to do?" Perhaps some old preacher, some mother in Israel, some father, will gently lay his hand on his shoulder and say: "Young man, don't you feel that God has a work for you to do?" Hide it from the church? Yes, hide it if you can. It will sparkle in the eye; it will sound in the tones of your voice; it will radiate through your whole countenance; it will be manifested in your deportment of God calls you.

When the church calls, and the voice of the church joins with this inward conviction, then I think the duty of the young man is to yield to the call of the church, and say: "This call, corresponding with my conviction, is probably from God." Let him do what the church gives him to do. But still the man is fallible himself, and the church is composed of fallible men; there may possibly be a mistake thus far, but let him begin to preach; let him deliver the counsel of God; and if, as he preaches, the tear starts in the eye, if sinners are awakened out of their sins, if souls are led to Christ, if there is fruit given him in his ministry, then God signs his diploma by his Holy Spirit.

The three attestations, then, are the conviction of inward spirit, the call of the church of God, and the attestation of the divine Spirit. Said the apostle, when appealed to for the proof of his ministry: "Ye are our letters"—ye are the proof or evidences of our ministration. And when the man can look around, look and say: "There is the drunkard reformed under my ministry, the wicked man become prayerful, the light and thoughtless one led to Christ," then there are evidences that God has called him. And I think that where these three testimonies combine we ought to have a certain conviction that God has called us to the ministry of the word. Where these three combine, oh, how fearful the responsibility of the man who will refuse to engage in this great work!—Bishop Scott.

SINK YOUR WELL.—The easiest time to sink your well is in wet weather, but the best time to dig one is in a time of drouth. Many wells sunk in times of spring freshets or autumn rains, in a little while become dry, and then the well has to be taken up and sunk deeper. The best time to sink a well, and the only time when a perpetual supply of water can be obtained, is in a time of drouth; then, as the well goes deeper and deeper, it passes beyond the surface water, and strikes those hidden currents which feed it from unfailing fountains.

There are many souls whose only knowledge of the water of life is gained in times of freshets, or revivals, when everything seems afloat; when the windows of heaven seem opened, and the earth beneath is saturated with the abundant showers. Then they know the blessedness of living water; but in the time of drouth, when comforts wither and joys depart, when all tokens of reviving have vanished, and when everything seems like barrenness and desolation, they too feel the blight of prevailing influences, and become like fountains that fail. Then is the time to sink such wells. Go deeper, learn something of the depths of the love of God. Go down through all this surface water, until you strike the divine reservoir, which cannot fail. Then as from an Artesian fountain there gushes up a stream which cannot fail, so in your heart the word that Christ has given shall be unto you a well of water springing up into everlasting life. Sink your well. Do not wait for a freshet, do not wait for a revival; now in your time of drouth and desolation, go in your Bible, go to your closet, go to your Savior, go to your God. Do not forsake the living waters; do not hew out broken cisterns that hold no water. Dig deep. Taste the divine fullness. Dwell in God, and God shall dwell in you.—The Christian.

O blessed prayer, thou art the unwearied conqueror of human woes. Thy voice of comfort is as a moist whistling wind in the midst of the furnace, tempering the heat of the flames.—St. Chrysostom.

Shake Hands.

"Do tell me the name of that sweet-looking old lady who sits behind us at church. She has spoken to us several times so pleasantly, and it is so unusual." Thus said a friend to me, not long since. Her family had attended that church for several years. Not only were they regular attendants, but at the stated periods they came to its communion table; they were members "in good and regular standing;" their faces were familiar to most of the congregation, yet it was "unusual" for any to speak to them.

They were strangers in the church, through no fault of their own, and they felt as such. There are many, no doubt, who "believe in the communion of saints," without pausing to see whether any particular meaning attaches to their belief; they do not forget to assemble together; but they do forget to follow after the "things wherewith one may edify another." We may not all be so placed as to admonish or exhort, or to provoke our brethren to good works; but we may sometimes show them, by a cordial word or two, that we remember they are our brethren—that we love them.

Ceremony is undoubtedly to be observed in this world—it is often necessary; but may not church members sometimes venture to speak one to another, even without a formal introduction? There are few of us who have not an intuitive sense to whom we may speak without hurting our dignity. That "sweet-looking old lady" preached a little sermon to our friends, which warmed their hearts for several weeks after.

"I maintain," says Dr. John Hall, "that the shaking of hands, rightly administered, is a means of grace. So shake hands at the market, on the street, and, above all, at church. Some people quit church for want of this means of grace." And no doubt some have been helped into the church by it. Friendliness goes a long way with some.

With some persons a kind word may strengthen "him that is weak in the faith." The heart of the writer warms while recalling the pleasant Sunday greetings of a Christian family, whose gentle courtesies were instrumental in bringing at least one into the visible church. The fervor awakened by a sermon full of love to Christ and good will to man will not be at all cooled by a cordial word, or hand-shake, meeting one on the way to the door. There should not be strangers of "regular standing" in the church. Then speak kindly every opportunity you have; shake hands, if you will. How do you know which is "the least of these?"—Christian Observer.

AN EVENING WITH FRANKLIN.—Soon after my return to Paris I dined and spent the evening with the immortal Franklin. Arriving at an early hour, I discovered the philosopher in a distant room, reading in the exact posture in which he is represented by an admirable engraving from his portrait, his left arm resting upon the right hand. His mingling in the most refined society of both hemispheres had communicated to his manners a kindness and urbanity well sustained by his native grace and elegance of department. His venerable locks waving over his shoulders, and the dignity of his personal appearance, commanded reverence and respect; and yet his manners were so pleasant and fascinating that one felt at ease and unrestrained in his presence. He inquired whether I knew he was a musician; and he conducted me across the room, to an instrument of his own invention, which he called the Armonica. The music was produced by a peculiar combination of hemispherical glasses. At my solicitation he played upon it, and performed some Scotch pastorals with great effect.—Sims Samuel Sorin.

SHARPSHOOTING.—The story that John Andrews tells of the countryman who derided the shots of the British marksmen on Bunker Hill monument, tallies with the accounts given both by Americans and Englishmen of the skill of the colonists, whose backwoods experience has made them very ready with their fowling-pieces and muskets. A correspondent of the Virginia Gazette writes: "One of the gentlemen appointed to command a company of riflemen, to be raised in one of the frontier counties of Pennsylvania, had so many applications from the people in his neighborhood to be enrolled for the service that a greater number presented than his instructions permitted him to engage, and, being unwilling to give offense to any, thought of the following expedient. He, with a piece of chalk, drew on a board the figure of a nose of the common size, which he placed at the distance of one hundred and fifty yards, declaring that those who should come nearest the mark should be enlisted. Sixty odd hit the object. Gen. Gage, take care of your nose."—Notes, in Sims Samuel Sorin.

The genuine "Master Humphrey's Clock" has at last arrived in America. Formerly it was seen over the door of Mr. Humphrey's shop in Bernard Castle, county of Durham, England. The owner was of great assistance to Charles Dickens in procuring that material for his Nicholas Nickleby, and even introduced him to the school, which he rendered notorious, under the title of Dotheboy's Hall. The clock was sent to Mr. Isaac H. Bailey, of 17 Spruce street, New York, and will remain a fixture in his office. It is described as a solid structure, with dial two feet in diameter, having the hours marked in yellow Roman numerals, on a slate-colored surface. It has a massive pendulum, and two heavy weights, which are in open view. The "oaken case," if it ever had one, did not come with it.

A fast youth asked at a 'Frisco restaurant: "What have you got?" "Almost everything," was the reply. "Almost everything? Well, give me a plate of that." "Certainly. One plate of hash!" shouted the waiter.

Religious Intelligence.

—A translation of Mr. Sankey's songs has been made into the Chinese language.

—The revivals in Amherst and Vassar Colleges are spoken of as specially interesting. In the former there have been sixty conversions, while at Vassar the work has been "deep, earnest and free from all excitement, no assistance being employed outside the college except an occasional preacher on the Sabbath."

—Infidelity and atheism are rapidly spreading among all classes in Italy. At a late trial in Rome, says the Free Church Record, the judges were greatly embarrassed by witness after witness refusing to be sworn on the gospels, because they were free thinkers. To meet the difficulty thus raised, the prime minister has introduced a bill altering the form of the oath.

—A return published by the Prussian minister of ecclesiastical affairs gives the following statement of the amount of money withdrawn from the Roman Catholic Church in Prussia, under the confiscation law of April 22, 1875: Bishoprics and the institutions pertaining to them, £58,422; salaries, etc., £59,725; money formerly paid for the improvement of the worldly condition of clergymen and teachers, £17,409; total, £135,478.

—Friends of the Church Missionary Society have presented to that association a vessel suitable to the wants of the East African mission. She is called "Highland Lassie," is an eighty-ton yacht, with auxiliary steam power, and will be used in going back and forth to Zanzibar and other places on the coast. She has been taken to Africa, via the Suez Canal, by Lieut. Shergold Smith, who is to lead the Victoria Nyanza expedition.

—At Gaboon, West Africa, recently, a missionary conference was held. It was composed of delegates from the Primitive Methodist mission at Fernando Po, the Baptist mission at Cameroons, the Scotch Presbyterian mission at Old Calabar, and the Church Missionary Society's mission on the Niger. In all there were twenty-two missionaries, male and female, in attendance. The conference was so successful that it was resolved to form a branch of the Evangelical Alliance, which will meet yearly.

—The London society missionaries on the Island of Madagascar are doing their utmost to make their vast accession of church members really worthy of the name. One of the missionaries stationed at Vonizongo, a district lying at some distance from the central province of the island, makes a report of his labors in the Chronicle. He acts as superintendent of about thirty village churches, educates a class of candidates for the ministry and a normal class in each of the schools, and also dispenses medicines to the sick. There has been a gratifying increase in the liberality of the people, as is shown by the fact that six new chapels, erected by means of their offerings, were about to be opened. Systematic efforts are also made in seeking out the many non-church-goers among the people. Schools have been started in nearly every village, are in great part maintained by the villagers, and are stimulated into greater efficiency by close inspection and judicious rewards. So great a stress is laid on Bible knowledge that members who show themselves willfully ignorant of reading are, after probation, excluded from the communion. Those who can read are diligent in instructing those who cannot. Each of the former has one or more of the latter in charge, and the superintendent keeps a written account of the whole state of the work.

Among the stations under the charge of Bishop Crowther, the energetic head of the Niger mission, is the town of Bonny, situated at one of the mouths of that river, there, amid the darkness of fetich worship, the gospel has taken firm hold upon many hearts. Our readers will remember an account in the Book of Martyrs of the persecution endured by the converts at this station. The juju priests, alarmed at the spread of Christianity, had obtained a decree prohibiting the attendance of any but children on the missionary's service; and the converts had been obliged to meet in small parties at night for mutual prayer. The decree still remains in force, but lately the people have gathered courage to break it, and have again begun to meet for public worship. Notwithstanding all the opposition, fifteen adults were baptized during the last year, and persons were added to the list of catechumens every week. The most recent accounts from Bonny, in the Church Missionary Intelligencer, state that the persecution has revived, and that one of the converts has sealed his faith with a martyr's death. The occasion of this outrage was a heathen festival, in honor of a deceased chief. Several Christians refused to join in the rites or eat of the sacrifices. They were beaten and put into irons, but remained steadfast. One of their number, Joshua Hart by name, was the especial object of the wrath of the enemies of the gospel. He had once before been arrested on the charge of attending church on Sunday. Upon his refusal to eat of the festal offerings he was repeatedly tossed up in the air by four men, and allowed to fall heavily upon the ground. When carelessly urged by several of the chiefs to recant, he declared himself ready to perform any labor for his masters which they might require of him; but to eat of things sacrificed to idols, this he would never do. He was then bound hand and foot, and taken out to the river to be drowned. Enraged at the prayers which he uttered to the Lord Jesus, his master cast him into the stream. As the body did not sink, he was taken out and once more urged to recant. He, however, remained steadfast; whereupon he was thrown into the water once more, his head crushed with a paddle, and his body thrust through with a sharp pole. Thus the young church has obtained the honor of having the name of a martyr on its church list.—Independent.

OUT OF THE FRYING-PAN INTO THE FIRE.

"Delighted!" cried Sir Mouse,
Who was looking quite chilly,
"Here's a fine little house—
I'll take a walk in!"

"Hang up on a hook
As nice as you please,
All cooked in a nice
Is a rare bit of cheese."

"Hallo!" said the cat;
"Look out what you do!
You'll spoil yourself out
Before you get through."

"Here, just take my paw,
My dear little friend!
I'd save you, I'm sure,
From such a sad end."

So poor little Mousie
Accepted the paw,
And got in the bargain
Miss Pussy Cat's jaw.

Watching for the Angels.

BY MARY C. BARTLETT.

When Willie was taken ill Ruthie was sent away from home to escape contagion. When she came back again mamma told her that her little brother had gone to a bright, beautiful place, where he never would be sick or tired any more—that the angels had taken him to heaven.

"What do you cry for, mamma?" asked wondering Ruthie. "When will they bring him back?"

Mamma wiped her eyes, and tried to speak cheerfully. "We must try to be good, little daughter, so that we shall be all ready when they come for us."

"If the angels came for you I'd go too," said Ruthie derisively.

Mamma smiled sadly.

"I would," repeated Ruthie, with a shake of her golden curls. Then she jumped down from her mother's lap, and ran up stairs to the nursery, but the unwonted stillness of the room oppressed her. "I didn't want him to be took," she sobbed. "I wish they'd bring him back. O I wish they'd bring him back!"

But the angels didn't bring him back; and when, soon afterward, mamma was taken ill, poor Ruthie wandered listlessly about the house, her little heart heavy with a nameless dread. Papa wanted to send her away again. Poor papa! How sorry he looked. Ruthie loved him very much; she was sure of that; but, as she used sometimes to say to Willie, "she didn't know him as she did mamma." So, when he tried to persuade her to go home with kind Aunt Eliza, she said not a word in reply, but ran off to her own little chamber, crying bitterly.

The angels had not brought Willie back. She didn't believe they ever brought anybody back. If they came for mamma, she would go with them. She had resolved upon that.

Every day she went in to see "dear mamma." Every day she came out from the chamber of sickness sober, yet content. The angels had not come yet.

One night Ruthie had a strange dream. She dreamed that papa came and took her from her warm bed, and carried her in his arms to mamma's room; that a pair of wistful eyes gazed tenderly into hers; that gentle lips touched her forehead very softly, and that she was held for a moment close, close to a loving heart.

When she awoke the next morning her dream came back to her. She ran softly through the hall, her small bare feet making no noise, and reached the door of the room unseen. She opened it carefully. At first she could see no one, and she shivered, more from a vague undefined dread than from the chill morning air which came in through the open window. As she stood trembling, papa entered, and started with surprise to see her there.

"Where's mamma?" asked a plaintive little voice.

Papa didn't say a word. Very gently, he lifted a snowy covering, and Ruthie saw her mother lying white and still—"fast asleep."

"It's too cold—papa," said she, winking very hard to keep back the tears.

But papa only sighed; and then, glancing down at the little feet, he bade her go and let Maggie dress her at once.

The next few days seemed to the child strange and unreal, like her dream. Aunt Eliza and Uncle Ben were there, and so many people coming and going all the time. Some of them cried as they looked at dear mamma. Some took Ruthie in their arms and kissed her, calling her "poor, dear little girl;" when there were others who did not cry, and who took no notice of her. It was very strange.

Aunt Eliza wondered at the mysterious attraction which drew her twice so many times to the chamber of death. Ah! she could not read the thought of that baby heart. She little dreamed for what the child was watching.

"They didn't come yet." The angels didn't come yet." This was the burden of poor Ruthie's little song, and she hoped on and waited patiently. But there came a day when many people gathered, all at once, in the parlor, in the sitting-room, upstairs. Ruthie was very quiet that day—everybody was quiet—mamma quietest of all; she didn't even look at the beautiful flowers which loving hands had placed around her. Ah, the strangeness of it all; but "the angels didn't come yet."

After the minister had "preached" there was a long, long ride, during which papa never spoke; then the getting out at the pretty cemetery. Ruthie knew the place quite well—she had been there so many times. But to see mamma lying there, in that strange-looking box, with the flowers about her; to see the box closed so tightly that the angels couldn't find her when they came; to see it lowered into the ground, and to hear the earth fall heavily upon it—what did it mean?

Ruthie couldn't speak at first, she was crying so; then she grasped the hand which was nearest her; it happened to be Uncle Ben's. Looking down through his tears he was startled at the expression of the childish face.

"Where are—the—angels?" sobbed Ruthie.

"The what?" he asked astonished.

"The angels. I was going—."

Uncle Ben took her in his arms and held her there. He wanted to comfort her, but he hardly knew how.

"You cannot understand it, child. It is only with the eye of faith that we can see the angels."

Ruthie rubbed her poor little swollen eyes. Alas, they were not "eyes of faith." They could not see the angels.

When papa came up stairs that evening for his good-night kiss he found his little daughter gazing thoughtfully at mamma's picture, which hung upon the wall near her bedside.

"Aunt 'Liza says she'll go to heaven. How can God find her, papa?"

"He has her now, my darling."

"Up in heaven?"

"Yes;" and he tried to explain something of the great mystery to his wondering child, who, if she didn't understand, was somehow comforted.

"But, oh, papa," she cried at length, "I waited so long. I wanted to go."

"Waited so long?" Papa was perplexed.

"Yes, for the angels;" and again the salt drops fell like rain from the blue eyes.

Papa's eyes were dim too. He held out his arms, and Ruthie crept into them, laying her tired little head upon his shoulder. For a moment both were silent, when he said softly:

"Would you go and leave me all alone, Ruthie?"

"Would you cry?"

"Of course I should. We must take care of each other now, you and I."

"Could I take care of you, papa?"

"Why not?"

The faint glimmer of a smile shone through Ruthie's tears. "I could get your slippers nights," she said thoughtfully; "and—once I made some toast." Long after the good dream-angel had chased away the memory of Ruthie's troubles, papa sat watching his sleeping child.

Poor baby heart, so sorely stricken! Who shall say that children do not feel? Not the sorrowing father, surely, who held her to his heart with a strange, new tenderness, born of their common sorrow. Ah! the angels will be with little Ruthie, though she cannot see them—the blessed angels of love and sweet home sympathy. She will know her papa now.—Congregationalist.

Little Strings.

You may have amused yourself with a face made of gutta-percha; pinching it one way, and pulling it another, and remarking what different expressions it will assume. When you left off pulling it returned to the same face it was before.

Now your faces are softer than gutta-percha, and they are full of little strings called muscles; and these muscles pull them one way or another, just according to your feelings. You feel sad; the little muscles pull your face into a doleful expression. We can tell, by looking at you, how you feel. Or you feel merry; then the muscles pull your face into smiles and dimples.

But often there are wicked passions at work at the strings. Anger pulls, and O what a disagreeable look the face puts on in a minute! Pride pulls the strings, or vanity or discontent or deceit; and each brings its own expression over the face.

The worst of it is that when these passions pull very often the face does not return to what it was before, but the muscles harden, and retain that ugly expression. By indulging in evil passions people may work their faces up into such awful faces that sometimes when you meet a man in the street you can tell, just by looking at his face, what his character is. A face that was very lovely when it was that of a child has had the passion of anger pulling at it so often that it always wears a sullen, cross, dissatisfied look.

Now, dear readers, do you want to have pleasant faces, that every one will love to look at? Then don't let the ugly passions get hold of the strings. Put them into the hands of love and charity and good will and truth and humility, and then they will be beautiful faces.

I have seen faces without a single handsome feature that were sweeter to look at than the most perfect features that were ever formed. And why? It is the expression. And what makes the expression? O it all depends upon whether the bad passions or the lovely graces get hold of the little strings.—Sunshine.

EDDIE'S FIRST WALK WITH AN UMBRELLA.—The little boy under his umbrella, the bright flower stuck in his hat, amused the people in the street. A lady smiled. One man stopped and spoke to him. Two girls turned around and laughed.

"Look at his hat, too!" said one to the other.

Lillie Hastings came along. "Hallo! Eddie," said she, "what are you doing with such a big umbrella?"

"Keeping off the rain."

The rain stopped, and Eddie's papa shut his umbrella; but Eddie still trudged along under his.

"Open your umbrella, papa. Mine is open," said the little boy.

"How do you suppose it all ended?

"Papa, you carry me," said a tired voice under the hat bright with flowers.

Ah, that is the way all through life. When the storms come we think we can go alone. But out in the weary way God hears a tired voice saying:

"Father, carry me!"—Eddie's Papa.

A humpkin once dining with the Governor of Rhode Island, where part of the entertainment consisted of champagne and preserved limes, was asked at the conclusion by his host how he liked the dinner. He replied: "Well, guv'nor, your cider's very good, but hang your pickles!"

Singing the Statutes.

David testifies that "thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage." It may be said that Christians have something better to sing. Christ has come and died and risen and ascended, and the hymn should now have him and his love as its burden. The most of our singing is indeed of his grace, and the depths of mercy revealed, and the inheritance he has secured for us. The commandments, precepts, statutes—the law of God—are not often celebrated in our melodies. Perhaps the grace of the gospel ought to be first, and most heartily exhibited, but is there nothing in the statutes to awaken gratitude and praise?

Not alone in worldly society and business, but also in the church, are the divine commandments falling somewhat into obscurity. The moral law is being smothered in a gospel of gushing sentiment, and is in danger of being utterly drowned in a flood of turbid devotional trash. A good man not only reverences the law, but he loves it. Like the ancient singer of Israel, "his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night." Although these and like expressions may be taken in a broad sense as relating to the entire written revelation, they are not without the special point of declaring a studious love and devout pleasure in the moral law. The longest Hebrew song is almost entirely occupied with the word of God, and the statutes, judgments and testimonies which it contains.

Ours is a better dispensation; but still the law is ours, and it is now, as then, holy, just and good. Truthfully and eloquently has John Wesley said: "The law of God, speaking after the manner of men, is a copy of the eternal mind, a transcript of the divine nature; yea, it is the fairest offspring of the everlasting Father, the brightest efflux of his essential wisdom, the visible beauty of the Most High. It is the delight and wonder of cherubim and seraphim, and all the company of heaven, and the glory and joy of every wise believer, every well-instructed child of God upon earth." Our hymn book contains in its collection the best selections that we know of, wherein the law and grace are blended in perfect harmony and in due proportions. Let the statutes be sung, and let them be exalted in our church melody. The spiritually-minded will rejoice in them, and it will be a means of keeping the holiness and righteousness of God before the minds of sinners. The Ten Commandments ought to be set to music, and sung in all of our congregations, at least once a week during these times of corruption and vice.

There is danger of falling into Antinomian enthusiasm, and of making void the law through a false conception of faith. The attainment of personal holiness, the duty of obedience, and the fashioning of our lives by the precepts, are less prominent in the popular collections than they should be. There are none who need to be so thoroughly grounded in the statutes as the children; but our Sunday school songs, with a vast deal of good and bad poetry, have but little of this preceptive element in them. It is safe to say that the songs, with their rhythm and music, will linger in the memory when almost all else shall be forgotten, and it is vastly important that the statutes should have a place in them. Let them stand as God's commandments, as the rule of living, and as defining the conduct and obligations of Christians, at the same time that Christ and the method of mercy are associated with them. We would not repress the overflowing joy of a free salvation, and the exuberant emotions of relief which spring from Christ as the sin-bearer of the world; but we would put the law of God where the great Teacher has placed it—in the very center of gospel doctrine and experience.

To us it is something significant and instructive that an inspired child of God should declare: "Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage." These were not dry and tedious themes to him, but such as awoke the harp and voice to their sweetest and sublimest strains, and cheered the pilgrim in his journey to the heavenly Canaan. His was a pilgrimage of song; the earthly house rang and vibrated with these notes of joyous obedience and spiritual desire. To him the statutes, in their awful purity and splendor, were wonderfully and surpassingly attractive. Veiled to the most, and fearful, to him they were incomparably beautiful and good. Grace stripped the law of its terrors, and revealed its loveliness. To him the statutes were the measure of mercy, the standard of privilege, and the universal and everlasting harmony. With clean hands and a pure heart he could sing them, and only so. With a clean heart and a right spirit the soul could rise on them to the throne of light, without losing sight of the mercy seat and its sprinkled blood. Gracious must be this state. God's statutes are the torment of the sinner, the aversion of the unbelieving, and the derision of scoffers, but they are the music of holy and trusting souls. As Wesley affirms, the law "is the glory and joy of every wise believer, every well-instructed child of God."

The Praying Spirit Breathe.

Friday, August 4, is the set time. There will be many camp meetings and protracted meetings in progress. The pastors generally will hold special services during the week, and these, we trust, will result in revivals.

It is an occasion which at least calls the attention of the church to the subject of prayer. Probably not one-tenth of our adult church members pray in public. There is delinquency in the matter of family prayer. Heads of families, professing godliness, are not few who neglect this most important duty. The order of their households differs little from that of unbelievers. The day is begun and ended with no distinct recognition, as a family, of God and his providence. Wives and children go their way without ever being drawn around this center of grace and spiritual instruction, and they are strangers to the comforts and peace which the home altar brings. Where other kinds of prayer are neglected, the taproot of all—secret prayer—is either neglected or attended to in a careless and perfunctory way.

Prayer is restrained before God. It is a revival of prayer that is needed. Prayer meetings should be permanently established where they do not already exist. People, young and old, not accustomed to this exercise will do well to begin now to call upon the name of the Lord. There are very few Christians of sound mind, common sense, and truly converted, who cannot learn to pray in their families, in the social meetings, and at the bedside of the sick and dying. The usefulness of a Christian is enhanced ten-fold by the cultivation of this gift. Not to be able or willing to pray is a strange attitude for any professor of religion to assume. It should be the rarest exception rather than the rule.

If the week of prayer does not stir up many who have hitherto had no family worship, it will fail in one of its most vital results. Family religion is far more essential to the general welfare than anything else. Our greatest want is decidedly religious homes, domestic piety, and the training of the young by religious parents, who pray with their children, instruct them in righteousness, and set them good examples. Religion at home, parental obligations, family prayer—let these capital things not be overlooked.

A stranger may not intermeddle with the secret heart-life of another. And yet we may say a word to those who pray but little in private. Herein "let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord." If prayer has been restrained in this direction it is a grievous fault. It is the fruitful cause of our spiritual leanness, and lies at the foundation of our weakness and lack of spirituality. Secret prayer is perhaps the best test of our sincerity, earnestness and spirituality. There can be no hypocrisy in it, and there can be no outward pressure such as sometimes keeps the lukewarm up to the performance of more public religious duties. But still private prayer, kept up from force of habit, and from a certain force of conscience, may become the most formal and the most lifeless of all praying. There may be no fervor in it, no strong groanings after holiness, no wrestlings of spirit for victory over sin, and the baptism of fire.

A week devoted to prayer should bring all the elements of prayer into living action. It should give the church a start in the way of praying that shall not be slackened for months and years to come. If it shall do this there will be abundant recompense. Revivals must follow prayer if prayer is made by all the church. Great grace and power will be sure to come if we pray. May God pour upon us the spirit of grace and of supplication!

Seashore Camp Meeting.

Rev. Dr. Walker opened the services with a sermon on Wednesday night, the nineteenth instant. The attendance is larger than heretofore, especially of those remaining on the ground. Penitents were at the altar at every service, and on Sunday night, the last service we attended, there were as many as one hundred or more seekers forward for prayers. Up to that time we suppose there had been forty or fifty conversions, and every indication that the interest would increase till the end. The Sunday attendance was not less than two thousand; the preaching tabernacle overflowed at every service with attentive and serious hearers, and perfect order prevailed throughout the day. The meeting will probably close on Thursday, the twenty-seventh. The two presiding elders, Dr. Walker, of the New Orleans district, and Dr. Cox, of the Mobile district, are in charge, and have conducted the services admirably. Fifty or sixty preachers have been present, and of course there is abundance of excellent preaching—four sermons a day. The trustees were at their posts and taking oversight of affairs. The good order maintained and the comfort of the people is largely due to their excellent arrangements and untiring efforts. A number of new tents have been built this year, and the grounds have been greatly improved. The Seashore camp ground never looked so bright and beautiful as this season. It is indeed a charming spot, and eternally endeared to thousands who have found it a Bethel to their souls. People are there this year from Mobile, New Orleans, Montgomery, Pensacola, Milton, Brandon, Selma, and from almost all parts of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. It is a place of annual reunion for the Methodists of these States, and one as nearly like heaven as any they will ever find until they pass through the shining portals. We shall be able next week to give further items, and the results as well as they can be gathered.

India's Progress.

Prof. Max Muller said to the late Dr. Norman Macleod: "From what I know of the Hindoos, they seem to me riper for Christianity than any nation that ever accepted the gospel." This remark justifies the following encouraging view given in the address of Henry Lee, Esq., chairman of the late annual meeting of the London Missionary Society, in Exeter Hall:

Slow as the advance of Christian truth in India may appear to be, even to its most sanguine friends, nevertheless every thoughtful mind will allow that that advance is real. The moral progress of the empire also has been unspeakably great. The heart of idolatry has been eaten away; education has spread widely; the Scriptures and Christian books are carefully studied at home; the power of the living Spirit is everywhere at work. It is molding the opinions and the faith of the masses; but it affects more deeply individual minds—there and there men and women are converted; large congregations listen intently to the story of the cross; multitudes of Hindoo boys never become idolaters at all; the landholder rends his Bible at home, and quietly drops caste observances; the Brahmin student sent to the city to learn English for a livelihood, after hard struggles, becomes a Christian; and the merchant and the shop-keeper purchase Christian books and study them; churches are slowly gathered; congregations increase; a Christian community is formed, the native convert becomes a preacher; the preacher converts others, and wins souls for Christ. Christianity is securing a native home in India which it will never leave. The air is full of change and restlessness and progress. Life is stirring everywhere—the life of the seed, the life of the sapling, the life of the wheat grain, priceless in value, which incloses within its tiny sheath the germs of mighty harvests in the days to come.

It is good that the victories we long for should not come too soon or with too much ease. It is good for all true workers to rightly estimate the difficulties of this mighty enterprise; that facts like those which the year has brought before us should make us pause and hold our breath as we contemplate these populous nations, these splendid pageants, these religious systems, so richly endowed, so strongly sustained by multitudes of followers. It is good to remember that the mighty reformation of opinion and of life at which we aim must be wrought not by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord. It is good that we toil with energy, that we labor with hope, and fix our eye on the great days to come. As the traveler who is crossing broad and level plains, and winds through forest and jungle, rejoices at the glimpses he obtains of lofty towers and sunlit heights upon the hills beyond; as the voyager looks across the stormy wave and boiling surf to the broad haven to which a single thread of quiet water leads him; so the Christian worker, strong in faith, looks beyond the day of doubt and struggle, with its germs of life and truth and blessing, to the age when the fruit of all the toil shall be gathered, when the new creation shall have been perfected. The world presents no nobler fields of conflict to the church. Where shall the Redeemer win a nobler triumph?

Death of Mrs. Jane Townsend.

The following letter from Bishop McTyeire contains a true and accurate estimate of his mother-in-law, Sister Townsend. A noble and gifted woman she was—a devoted Christian of deep experience and rare intelligence. Her friendship and sympathy were a rich benediction to those who knew her. She had known affliction, and we have never known any one who could minister more tenderly and helpfully to the bereaved. We shall never forget the light and comfort which her presence brought to us in a time of great sorrow. She and Sister Lowber are now together in heaven. We thank God that we ever knew them. The memory of them will ever be precious to us. Sister Townsend was one of the oldest members among the Methodists of Mobile. She joined them when young, and ever clung to them with a strong affection. She lived several years in New Orleans, and is most lovingly and gratefully remembered here. She was sixty-six years old on the fourth of July last. We saw her for the last time at the Seashore camp meeting two years ago. Her testimony at the experience meeting there was marked by depth, maturity and sweetness, and expressed with wonderful power and beauty. We could from the fullness of our heart say much of this elect lady, but with the Bishop's just and tenderly filial tribute before us it would be out of place.

NASHVILLE, July 17, 1876.

DEAR BRO. PARKER: This morning, half-after nine o'clock, Mrs. Townsend died. I know that this will be news of sad interest to you and many of her other old friends in New Orleans and Mobile; and the sorrow of my spirit, after taking leave of her, and while I sit apart, within hearing of the sobs of my wife and children, unable to comfort them, leads me to commune with those at a distance whom she loved much, and of whom she often spoke. They, at least, are calm now; and calmness in those of whose sympathy we are assured is a great rest and relief.

Having but one child living; she was persuaded at length to quit her much-loved home in Mobile, that had become solitary, and to come to us on a visit of indefinite length. She came last September, and we were happy to see a purpose forming to spend the rest of her days with us. She took pleasure in our home and in the company of her grandchildren, and began to plan for removing favorite flowers from her home to our yard. By such tokens we gathered her growing contentment here. But whenever a certain cord was touched it could be plainly seen that it was as a foreign land. The friends of her youth and the graves of her dead were—yonder!

She longed exceedingly to be at the next Seashore camp meeting. When the children talked of the Centennial she would say: "I would a great deal rather go to the Seashore camp meeting than to the Centennial." To mingle in the prayer meetings, and hear familiar voices in the praise and preaching of the sanctuary—how often she longed for this! She liked the people and the preaching here; but it was not that people and that preaching! So difficult it is for people of great depth of sentiment and of a certain age ever to transfer home from one place on earth to another.

Symptoms of dysentery appeared the last week in June; but she appeared so regularly with us at family prayers and at table that there was no thought of a serious case until a week ago, when we insisted on calling in the family physician. Even our good old friend and helper in trouble, Dr. Austin, could not have been more kind and attentive than Dr. Menees was. He saw nothing serious until Friday, when he called in Dr. Maddin, symptoms of inflammation appearing. Notwithstanding their acknowledged skill and care, the fatal malady rapidly ran its course.

We are arranging to give her temporary interment here, where one of our children was buried in 1860. But that spot, often watered by her tears, in the Mobile graveyard, will be her resting-place, after frost, until the resurrection.

Her mind was clear, to a singular degree, till the moment when speech failed—just a little while before her death; and after speech failed, I doubt not, she understood me when I told her of a telegram just received from Bro. Price Williams, of Mobile, inquiring how she was. Many of her remarks were characteristic to the last. "This is my last sickness. * * * Who would have thought that I was coming up here to die? * * * How often have I read in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: 'Died, at the residence of her son-in-law;' and it will be so in my case. * * * I'm sorry, children, to make your beautiful new home sad by your having a death in it so soon, and your mother's death too. * * * May I be forgiven for all the thoughtless speeches I ever made. * * * I forgive everybody."

Her prayers were frequent, earnest, ejaculatory. She walked through the dark valley "fearing no evil." Her end was peace. I think she realized an answer to this prayer:

"Walk with me through the dreadful shade,
And certified that thou art mine,
My spirit, calm and undismayed,
I shall into thy hands resign."

But not more. A triumph, such as is sometimes the lot of God's saints, was not decreed to her. She had a great and sore struggle on one point—three little children of her youngest daughter deceased. This has been her heaviest burden for years, and it was the last burden that she cast off, by casting it upon the Lord. I think this was a cause of some darkness to her.

It is an unspeakable comfort that she spent her last days with us. We thankfully accept it as from that Providence which orders all our steps, even the final step that brings us to the grave. A few days before she died two of her grandchildren came up to visit us—those motherless ones over whom her heart has yearned almost to breaking. The words that "Nellie and Willie had come"—words that would have made her heart leap at other times—failed to draw forth any special token. Next morning, however (last Wednesday), she got out of bed very early, and went into the adjoining room, where Nellie slept; leaned over and kissed her, and returned to lie down and rise up no more.

In many respects Mrs. Townsend was a remarkable woman. In the sphere of dispassionate and patient judgment she was not expert. Seeing things through a dry light was not her wont. But she was rich in emotions. She was endowed by nature with a rare wealth of sentiment, and that of a high order. Her religious experience had a depth equal to Madam Guyon's. In its beginning she had but few instructors; but she was led of the Spirit. Wesley's journals and his sermons fell into her hands about the time she joined the church. These she read through and through many times, to great edification. She read Henry's large commentary through twice. She considered a good religious meeting to be the perfection of all human assemblies; and a good sermon as the highest reach of human speech; and an earnest, pure-minded Christian as the finest excellence of human nature. She was gifted in prayer; and this gift she sometimes exercised not only in the class and prayer meeting, but also in larger congregations. But never, on these latter occasions, voluntarily. She responded to official request, lest her conscience should condemn her for refusing. She was truthful to such a degree that the least known departure from the truth would have been intolerable to her reflecting memory. To the poor she was kind—as many will testify "in that day." She kept some books of tried usefulness on purpose to lend to persons whose condition they suited. A good many of these are out now on duty; and their works will "follow after." She pleaded with many, by letter, to be reconciled to God. Her self-depreciations sometimes bordered on the sin of despondency; and idle words or harsh judgments inflicted more pain on the penitent who uttered them than on any who might be the object of them. The true, the good and the beautiful she had a supreme appreciation of—even at their best. She was such an one that you might wish her to be a witness of the best thing you could do, or a hearer of the best thing you could say. Though she was not in all things adjusted to the square practicalities of earthly life, I know of no one who has gone to heaven with a better capacity to enjoy its highest happiness. She was a person you would think of when in the presence of some beauty or blessedness—some vision or reality of sublimity or excellence which you could not take in or exhaust alone. No thoughtful person ever came into contact with her without having his own being enriched thereby.

While I send you this letter out of my house, the angel of death is in it. "We cannot make her dead." It is hard to realize that we shall hear no more the voice that was so eloquent of grief and so cheerful in the circle of congenial friends—passing in a mood from grave to gay, from lively to severe. There is one less to pray for us. A sense of bereavement is enfolded in one thought—that a heart is still in death, that beat true and warm for her children. There is and can be on earth no other like that, for them. Her going away has brought the world to come very nigh to us—the brightest age of the world to come. She loved you and your ministry, and was often edified by it. The same I might say of others, our beloved ministers in New Orleans, but especially those who are or have been of Mobile. How long the list of preachers and people, in both cities, who lived in her heart, even though many of them are dead! Let us look forward and hasten unto the time and place where

They shall meet again
Who have loved.

I am, with all in my house, yours affectionately,

H. N. MCTYEIRE.

NEW MEXICO.—A writer in the Mission Field gives the following account of the progress of the gospel in New Mexico. She says:

Our school is larger than ever before, and the pupils are doing better. At their request we now have a large Bible class in school, as also a class of the same size in the Shorter Catechism. Sabbath services are well attended this winter at each point, and the Saturday afternoon appointment has always had a good attendance. Besides these four, Mr. Roberts has been lately requested by a settlement of Penitents to come and preach to them. He has been there twice, and been listened to with great earnestness. They have bought quite a number of Bibles and other books, and we hope and pray that they are being led of the Holy Spirit into the true light. Yet another village asks him to come there; but where is his time? Here are five congregations to minister to, and scarcely any time for preparation. He ought also to visit these people during the week, but the time is wanting, and we are both cut off from this means of reaching the people. I feel that the work of the school ought to be given into other hands, and Mr. Roberts have more time for visitation. Our next companion will be in a few weeks. There are quite a number between two opinions, desiring to unite with us, yet dreading the persecution which will be heaped upon them.

APPRECIATIVE.—A sister in the country writes us as follows:

Your editorial on "Clouds After the Rain" was a great comfort to my aged mother. She got happy and shouted over it, and said: "I want you to write and tell the editor that I have had storms and rain all my life; and now when I see the clouds I feel like I wanted to go shouting home to heaven in the rain, and that all the clouds have a silver lining to me now. I am waiting by the river, ready to go. And tell him that he wrote that all for me, for me." Then she repeated all of the hymn "To preach my gospel, saith the Lord." She is in her eighty-third year, and has been confined to her bed one year with partial paralysis and other infirmities of old age. She suffers much, but is cheerful and happy. She enjoys reading the ADVOCATE. I hope you will have a glorious revival at camp meeting. With my best wishes and poor prayers, believe me very truly yours in Christ.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—At the present time New Orleans is about the healthiest city in the United States. We are in the midst of the heated term, and have reached the time when yellow fever may be looked for, if it appears at all. But up to this writing there has been none; and New Orleans was never more free from epidemic disease. There is now every indication of continued good health throughout the summer and fall.

We were glad once more to meet the venerable David Ayers at the Seashore camp meeting. He has been very ill, but is measurably restored, and at most of the services was in his accustomed place, with his ear to the pipe connected with the pulpit.

Alas for Tennessee, if it had no more religion in it than what is dispensed by the church. Here is its strength, according to the journal of the forty-fourth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Tennessee: Number of clergy, 30; baptisms, 455; confirmations, 160; communicants, 3,056; Sunday school teachers, 261; pupils, 2,142; contributions, including salaries, $68 509 72.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A man of deep religious experience is always effective. I care not how poor his voice is, or how uncomely his countenance, or how awkward his gestures, or how shabby his clothes, or how lame his grammar. By taking good care of our own vineyard we learn how to help others in the care of their vineyard. If you cannot raise grapes in your garden, you cannot raise them in mine.—Talmage.

Meeting of the Commissioners

THE ALABAMA AND NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCES.

MR. EDITOR: I have thought proper to furnish these facts to the ADVOCATE, as many persons desire to know how this settlement between the Conferences is progressing and what will be the end.

There were certain funds belonging to the old original Alabama Conference, and when the present Alabama Conference and North Alabama Conference were authorized by the General Conference of 1870 a difference of opinion was found to exist relative to the division of certain funds belonging to the original Conference. At the last session of the two Conferences commissioners were appointed from the two bodies to adjust the matter, and in case they could not agree to settle the same by arbitration. According to appointment, the commissioners met at Montevallo, July 11. Rev. Anson West and Col. Terry, of the North Alabama Conference, were present, and Judge Wood and myself from the Alabama Conference. Judge Wood, of Florence, and Judge Pettus, of Selma, were absent. We had a free and familiar interview, and readily agreed that the best course would be to refer the whole matter to competent and disinterested parties to adjust, and we bound ourselves and the respective Conferences to abide their decision. Judge Mudd, of Birmingham, and Judge Pettus, of Selma, were chosen arbitrators. The facts are to be furnished them, and if they cannot agree then they are to call in a third person, and their decision is to be final. It is understood that the facts are to be furnished these gentlemen immediately, and that the whole matter will be disposed of very soon.

A. H. MITCHELL.

MONTEVALLO, July 19, 1876.

A Skeptic Tested.

Some time since a clergyman, living in a community where skepticism and infidelity had led many astray, began a series of discourses on the evidences of Christianity. Of course more or less of his opposers were present, and on the last night of the series a prominent infidel came in. Before the close of a very impressive meeting, the speaker said in a spirit of tenderness:

"There may be, and doubtless are, some here tonight who do not believe as I do, and who do not accept the truth of the Bible. If there are such, or if there is one willing to come forward and test this question of vital interest to every soul, I invite him to the platform."

At the instant the infidel referred to came forward and said:

"I do not believe your doctrines—I must not accept them."

"But," says the clergyman, "you denounced for years that which I have never tested. Are you willing that I, who have tried Christianity and feel its truths, shall be your teacher, and will you submit to my directions? You say that you are honest in your belief, and in an honest spirit you will meet me."

"I do thus meet you, and I will have you to be my teacher."

"Then," said the godly man, "kneel by my side and repeat the simple words: 'God, be merciful to me a sinner!'"

"But," was the reply, "I do not believe in your teachings."

"Well, you say you are honest and willing to test this question; if so, you will heed my directions."

The audience, in hushed expectation, heard the infidel, as he suddenly kneeled, utter the words desired, with sarcastic defiance.

Again repeat those words," said the teacher in tones of utmost gentleness and again, still defiant, yet half subdued, the infidel repeated: "God, be merciful to me, a sinner."

Once more came the request to repeat the sentence; and before the audience, held by the power of the Holy Spirit, that petition went up in a tone of almost tenderness, certainly very different from the bravado with which it was at first repeated.

A fourth time came the request: "Repeat it again;" and, with his whole frame quivering with emotion, tears drops poured out his soul's prayer of the publican. The fifth repetition the man then arose, before the large assembly, looked up from his inmost soul to God, and when, thus uttered, with a forgiving Father's pardon,

"Give the simple facts as told to a child only ask the question of all believers: "Why will you, deceive faith which you have never tried the test?"—Methodist and Visitor.

The New Holy Family by Raphael has been discovered at Lavaguido, in Italy. A peasant of that place recently took an old picture which had been long lying in a loft to hang, having some broken squares of glass in the window. In order to keep out the sun, M. Disegul, professor of music at Genoa, saw it by chance, covered with dust and dirt, and purchased it. He afterward sold it for 2,500f. Pierama, a connoisseur, who, having had it restored, discovered that it was an authentic Holy Family by Raphael, and the Academy of Urbino decided in the same sense. The picture bears the grains of the Rovere family, the archives of which relate to a picture on that subject was painted of the great painter.

Is not an unusual thing nowadays for farmers in Kentucky to witness every farm-yard wild-eyed and gesticulating skyward and yelling: "No more corned beef! Send some quail on toast."

ODD PATENTS.—The whole examining force of the Patent Office at Washington numbers about one hundred, of whom two are ladies. Of course among such a large number there are to be found men of every kind. Some are so illiberal that they will never grant a patent when they can possibly refuse it; others go to the opposite extreme. Each one having his own idea of what constitutes an invention, of what is useful, many ridiculous patents have been granted. One man obtained a patent for a combined plow and cannon. Whenever the farmer, while at work in the field, saw any savages or tramps approaching he was to unhitch his team, so as to get them from before the muzzle, apply the match, and say his prayers, for the farmer was a good deal more likely to be killed by the recoil than the savages by the shot. In case the cannon went off while in use as a plow, it was unfortunate for both the team and the farmer. A patent was granted to another person for tying a brick to a cow's tail, so as to prevent her switching her tail in his eyes while milking. Another received a patent for placing a house on rollers, so that in case of an earthquake the house would not be shaken to pieces. Still another received a patent for a combined trunk and house. The trunk is made with triple walls, so that by taking the articles out of the trunk, and extending the two extra walls, a house is formed.—Washington Chronicle.

The Carnuba palm, in Brazil, is a remarkable tree. It is very hardy, and requires no culture. The top, when young, is a nutritious article of food, and from this tree also wine, vinegar and a saccharine matter are extracted, as well as a kind of gum similar in its taste and properties to sago. From the wood musical instruments are made, as also tubs and pumps for water. The delicate fibrous substances of the pith of the stalk and its leaves make a good substitute for cork. The roots have the same virtues as the sarsaparilla. The pulp of the fruit is of an agreeable taste, and the nut, oily and emulsive, is roasted and then used as coffee by many persons. From the trunk are obtained strong fibers, and also a species of flour similar to maizena, and a gum resembling that of the Balsa coconut. From the dried straw are made mats, hats, baskets and brooms, and large quantities of the straw are exported to Europe for the manufacture of the hats. Finally, from the leaves is produced the wax used in the manufacture of candles; and the export of this wax exceeds $800,000 a year in value.

Time is inexhaustibly long, and every day is a vessel into which much may be poured, if one only wishes to fill it up.

MARRIED.

HOLLAND—BOYD.—At the residence of the bride's uncle, in Carroll parish, La., on the fourth of July, 1876, by Rev. T. H. Mevellon, Mr. G. S. Holland to Miss Bettie Boyd, all of Carroll.

CREDELLE—HARNESS.—June 15, 1876, at the residence of the bride's father, by the Rev. Robert Randle, Mr. —— Credelle, of Leesburg, Fla., to Miss Minnie Harness, of Caddo parish, La.

IMPROVEMENT ON CANAL STREET.—In former times, as far back as we can remember, the establishment of Messrs. Henderson & Gaines occupied the large building at 100 Canal street, and supplied their numerous customers with all kinds of imported and domestic goods in their line. The house before the war was known throughout the valley of the Mississippi as one of the most staunch and reliable in the country. Some years ago the copartnership of Messrs. Henderson & Gaines was dissolved, and Stephen Z. Relf, Esq., received into copartnership with Mr. Gaines, under the style of Gaines & Relf, and the business has been carried on at 120 Common street. The numerous friends of the firm, and especially the old friends and acquaintances of Henderson & Gaines, will welcome back to their old and desirable stand, at 100 Canal street, one of the cleverest firms in the city, who still maintain the courtesy and fairness in trade which gave the house its high standing to other days. Those who need for use, or are dealing in crockery, glass and China ware, cutlery, guns or house-furnishing goods, remember that Gaines & Relf are now moving to the old stand at 100 Canal street, which is being filled up, as near as possible, as it was before the war.

GORDON FOOD.—The advertisement of the above-named food for horses and cattle will be found in our paper to-day. It is very highly spoken of by competent judges. An agency has only lately been established here, but the article has for some time been before the public in the North and in England. We would advise our friends who have live stock, to give the food a trial, and we think they will not be disappointed. Mr. Samuel Mullen is the agent, at 53 Poydras street, New Orleans, and any letters addressed to him will receive prompt attention.

CUSHING'S MACHINERY AGENCY.—W. L. Cushing, Esq., whose advertisement appears elsewhere, is one of our most worthy and enterprising citizens. His business relations are extensive and influential, and those in need of machinery of any kind, and especially those who need cotton gins, cotton presses, corn and wheat mills, sugar mill and cane mashers will do well to visit his depot, at 61 St. Charles street, New Orleans, or W. L. Cushing & Moore, Galveston, Texas, or send for circulars.

Send for descriptive circulars.

Improved Eagle Cotton Gins,

PRICES REDUCED.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established beyond the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best-built Cotton Gins extant. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the farmer-planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold, during a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kindred gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers. Who use only ten-inch cylinders, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in large-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an unfixed experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is endorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the region where it is in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale by New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand feeding gins.

Upon the information which received the grand prize at St. Louis, and has worn so many thousands of dollars at numerous fairs, was gained on the Eagle cotton gin.

Prices Have Been Greatly Reduced.

All orders should be addressed to

IF YOU FEEL DULL, DROWSY, DEBILITATED, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver or "Biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine.

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1872: "I personally can say when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and aids me better than any native remedies." 5p1c.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR Coughs, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Complaints—product of our Swamps—is the most effective Remedy that has ever appeared. Contains NO POISON, and, is delicious. The proofs are overwhelming, and daily increase! Nearly ELEVEN PAGES of names of HOME REFERENCES at one depot, 106 CAMP STREET, New Orleans. Life Tonic, infallible for Chills, Swamp Fever, etc. Sold by Country Merchants and Druggists. 5p.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden, and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. No drastic, violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

SHOULD not be regarded as a trifling ailment; to feel nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

Ask the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine.

Pekin Ducks.

MR. EDITOR: I commenced raising Pekin ducks this year, and I find them to be very easily raised—less trouble, in fact, than chickens. I find them to be very easily chilled when young, and if you let them have water to wash and swim in it is almost sure to kill them. But after a month or six weeks you may let them have all the water you can afford, and no bad result will follow. They are very hardy—can be raised wherever chickens can be raised, and require no more water than chicks. They bear confinement well, and are very easily confined. A foot plank will turn grown ducks. I feed mine just as I do my chicks when young—a hard-boiled egg, corn meal and wheat bran scalded, and vegetables, cooked and raw, just as we have them. I never give my chickens or ducks meat, but sometimes mix up their feed with the dish-water and washings from the table. I find it best not to feed ducks with chickens, as they have a peculiar way of scooping up the food, so different from chickens, that they get the most of the feed. They should not use the same vessel for water, as they dabble in the water so much that it renders it unfit for chickens. They grow very fast and mature early, getting large enough at two and three months old for market. I have eight ducklings, just three months old on the eighth instant, that weighed forty pounds, averaging five pounds to the duck, and not stuffed, but fed to keep them growing and in health. I think ducks will bear high feed or stuffing better than chickens, and will pay for their feed quicker. They are great layers, laying from one hundred to two hundred eggs in a season. They are non-sitters. They have very soft, downy feathers, and yield nearly as many as common geese. They are creamy white in color, bills orange, and legs reddish-orange, and very stout and short. They are certainly the best duck we can raise here or anywhere else for pleasure or profit. My ducklings now are nearly as large as ducks hatched last year; in fact you can hardly tell one from the other—all Pekins. They will cross readily with the Aylesbury and Ronen ducks, and are said to improve their size; but I believe in a pure breed of any kind of chickens or ducks, and then you can keep them pure and know what you are breeding.

J. M. SIMMONS, M. D.

LAUDERDALE, Miss., July 14, 1876.

VALUE OF COMB.—In the old times, when bees were killed by the fumes of sulphur in order to get the contents of the hive, no one regarded the comb as of any value, excepting for the wax it would produce. In speaking of this waste, Mrs. E. S. Tupper says:

"Since it is known that every pound of wax is worth to the bees at least twenty pounds of honey, because so much must be consumed in its production, it is evident that economy would prompt that every pound should be made available. By the use of movable comb frames every piece can be fastened in and given to the bees, who gladly receive it. When a bee-keeper has a quantity of comb made in frames, he can then make them of great value to him. Such combs should be carefully preserved, if there is a surplus of them, from year to year. Combs are never too old for the bee to use; instances are frequent where bees have been kept twelve and fifteen years in hives stocked with comb which has never been removed. Even box-hives, from which the bees have died, may be kept with care, and a swarm put in them the next year. I once had two swarms of bees come off the same day, one of which I put into a hive stocked with comb, and the other into an empty one. Both swarms seemed of the same size. The one put into the hive with combs gave me that year forty-seven pounds of honey in boxes, while the one in the empty hive barely filled up for the winter. Many facts of the kind might be given to prove that it never pays to melt good worker comb at ordinary prices of wax and honey."

"The 'honey-extractor' is a machine now in general use, by means of which the combs can be emptied of their contents and returned to the bees to be filled. By its use the yield of honey has been largely increased, and the comb made even more valuable to the bee-keeper."

POULTRY FOR PROFIT.—The Asiatics are the great meat producers. The Light and Dark Brahmas, the Buff and Partridge Cochins, are all excellent layers, good mothers, are hardy and make the best farm chickens. Being of such fine, large size, they pay a better profit when sold by the pound, and are, while young, good table fowls, and no farmer can afford to raise common chickens while these valuable breeds can be so readily had.

The non-sitting varieties—the Houdans, Leghorns and Spanish—are superior layers, seldom wanting to sit, are very active, and, although not so large, are excellent table fowls. We advise only one breed to be kept on the farm; not so much importance what particular breed, as that you keep them pure and give them proper attention and comfortable quarters; and now, as the season for breeding comes on, by all means clean out their quarters to start with, and keep them clean, and the liberal application of carbolic whitewash and occasional dusting of sulphur and sprinkling of coal oil on the roosts will keep off the vermin, the great pest to chicken-raising.

In addition to the variety of feed, don't forget to keep a constant supply of fresh, clean water, and when the chickens are hatched out don't let the rats and cats carry them off, but put each hen up at night in a tight coop, where rats can't get in.

The Prairie Farmer says: "Fifty fowls will make, in the roosting-house alone, one-half ton per annum of the best manure in the world, or, more than enough to manure an acre of land, seven hundred pounds of guano being the usual quantity applied per acre, and poultry manure is known to be still richer in ammonia and fertilizing salts. No other stock will give an equal return in this way; and the figures will demand careful attention from the farmer."

There is a vast difference in the flavor of eggs. Hens fed on clean, sound grain and kept on a clear grass run give much finer-flavored eggs than hens that have access to stable and manure heaps, and eat all kinds of filthy food. Hens feeding on fish and onions flavor their eggs accordingly, the same as cows eating onions or cabbage, or drinking offensive water, impart a bad taste to the milk and butter. The richer the food the higher the color of the eggs.

The Springfield Republican has an account of a humorous tramp, who stopped at one Widow H.'s, in Brookfield, Mass., a few days since, and asked for food. She replied she had none. Mr. Tramp went across the road to a neighbor's and asked if they were aware the woman living on the other side was starving. He then requested the loan of a fishing-rod lying close by, which was granted. With it he went to a pond a short distance off, fished for several hours, catching a good string, returned to Widow H., and made her a present of them.

EDUCATIONAL.

Wesleyan Female Institute,
STAUNTON, VA.,

WILL begin its twenty-seventh annual session SEPTEMBER 21, 1876. Rev. W. A. HARRIS, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three teachers and officers.

Modern Languages taught and spoken in the college by a European teacher. Music by able professors and teachers, among whom are some of the most cultivated teachers of vocal music in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the Union. Its marked effect is the rapid promotion of the health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come here from the South with feeble constitutions and climatic diseases are generally restored.

Buildings elegant—fanned by purest breezes, commanding the most magnificent scenery, and combining such varied attractions as to make it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

This school is usually attended by pupils from fifteen to seventeen different States.

Great economy and simplicity in dress are required. A simple uniform is worn. No unnecessary expense allowed. Strict economy practiced to limit expenses of pupils.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Va., under the presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions for young ladies in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters there. Its course of study is ample, its Faculty accomplished, and its instruction both solid and elegant. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more eligible, no scenery more magnificent, no atmosphere more salubrious. Not the least of its merits is that sacred regard for religious training, without which no female college especially would be a blessing.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the Church. Instruction as thorough. Its music advantages are all-real of very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent.

DUCONGE'S
PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Throat, so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it needs no further puffing, at this late day, to swell its well-earned length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides the acknowledged certainty of cure, a truly extraordinary medicine has, over many thousands of pounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, as it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, certainly because the bottles contain more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without spoiling, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night can take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup when going to bed, which will stop the cough and procure a quiet rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three or four hours. For sale by

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER!

THE MYSTERY,
Or Turner's Hair Tint

HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the indorsement of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind. No washing or preparation of the hair necessary before using.

It is free from all Deleterious Ingredients, such as Lead, Sulphur or other compounds which are injurious to the Hair or Health. Producing its Color by Absorption.

And its use serves both ornament and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb, once a month will keep the hair or whiskers, as the case may be, of their natural color being so perfectly assimilated as to defy detection. Its great recommendation is the production of that, producing any desired shade from light brown to the deepest black and the absence of that dry and burned appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery can be applied to a single hair, or spots that have changed can be restored to their original shade without applying all over the head, as is necessary in using other Hair Dyes.

Scientific.

In the arid districts of Mexico Cactaceæ are a familiar feature. y are soft and juicy, and this soft juicy character seems just the g for preserving vitality during dry periods that occur there. In strict in Southern Africa, known the Griqua States, and also an exmely dry district, a class of plants recently been found which, like Cactaceæ of our own continent, live for long periods without er; but, instead of being soft and ulent, are hard and seem like d stone. Dr. Hooker had a ntity sent to him, and he debes them as "spindle-shaped, dy stocks of stony hardness." ne of these remained some years er Dr. Hooker's hands, though moist hot-house, before exhibitany signs of growth, in this reet corresponding with our Cactus, some of which the writer of this known to remain twenty years hout the slightest growth being nifest. When these rock-like dles grew, however, Dr. Hooker astonished to find them belong atural families of no immediate tionship to one another. There e among them asclepiods and rbits, convolvulads, geraniums, nfuse plants and others.

COTTON PRESS.
THIS, the most recent improvement ever made upon the Screw Cotton Press, is taking all their ground by storm, and adds fresh proof to the old adage that "Nothing succeeds like success." With the mill open there is no weight or pressure to impede the rapid run. Then one nut is closed and the pressure is done in the usual manner. To open the nut, and take up the screw and follower instead of screwing up, thus saving, and lowering the screw by means of the cone clutch, saves to working the press at least sixty times, reducing the time and labor of pressing a cotton bale.
This Press has been in use for over all competitors at the late State Fairs of Mississippi and Louisiana.

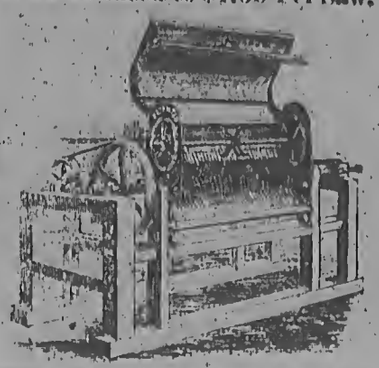
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.
PATENTED JULY 18, 1871.
Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while consuming steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every localities ginned. GENERAL MARKET.

Our mercantile friends seem hopeful, and many of the stores are being repaired and stocks replenished, showing that faith yet exists in our country. The shipments this week have been steady, though not large. A goodly number of buyers from the country are here looking for bargains, which surely they will find, for goods are very low. Orders can be filled at New York prices. Our city is healthy, and none need fear visiting us. Many of the leading merchants are remaining here, and will be happy to wait upon their customers in person. Due efforts will be made to show merchants and planters that this is the cheapest and best market for them. Come and try, then you will know it is so.

Special Notices.

THE SCHOOL FOR BOYS.—Rev. F. M. Grace, A. M., once a professor in the East Tennessee University, and afterward president of Hiwassee College, puts into his paper, the Iron Age, Birmingham, the following notice:

"Hiwassee College closed its annual exercises May 25. We learn from the biennial catalogue that the number of students was one hundred and eighty-six, many of them from Alabama and other gulf States. There is no better school in the world for a boy than Hiwassee. Address President John H. Brunner, Hiwassee College, East Tennessee."

HONG KONG, July 2, via Yokohama.—The anti-coolie excitement ...cks immigration for the present, ...one hundred and fifty-six Chinaman being on board. The German ...inister Von Brant is pressing the ...ese government severely in the ...tter of treaty revision. He is re...ported to have made separate de...ands, the most important of which ...that the whole of China be open...for intercourse and trade; that ...l taxes detrimental to foreign in...sts be abolished; that permission ...l be given to foreigners to nav...gate our inland waters, and that ...ina adopt responsibilities of international law. A famine is threatening in the provinces of Chili, Shahsi, Honan and Nankin, in consequence of prolonged drouth. The ...ops are destroyed in over eight ...ndred square miles of country, inhabited by seventy million people. ...Disastrous inundation of Too-Chow ...the surrounding country commenced June 16 and ended on the fifteenth. The highest floods within foreign remembrance. Great loss of life is reported, five thousand dead bodies having been recovered near Too-Chow alone. Foreign property is slightly damaged.

HAVANA, July 25.—The steamship City of Merida, from Vera Cruz, arrived here this morning, bringing dates from the city of Mexico to the sixteenth.

Gen. Alatorre, with his advance, numbering four hundred men, defeated, on the fifteenth instant, the revolutionist Fidencio Hernandez, with thirteen hundred men, at Fortin, on the railway near Orizaba.

It was a complete and decisive victory. One hundred revolutionists were killed, and Hernandez himself is a prisoner, with six hundred of his followers. All of their artillery, ammunition and one hundred and seventy-seven mules were captured.

The forces of Hernandez having been the best organized, this is a very important blow to the revolution. The government troops reoccupied Jalapa on the twelfth instant. Gen. Porfirio Diaz is reported at Oaxaca.

The defeat and capture of Trevino, the chief rebel in the north, is reported, but not confirmed officially. It is now stated that President Lerdo only permitted his name to be used as a presidential candidate as an offset to the revolutionists, and that he will decline an inauguration, when Tgiezjac, chief supreme justice, will take the chair and immediately order a new election.

Mr. Foster, the American minister, was to leave for New Orleans on the twentieth.

VIENNA, July 28.—The New Freie Press asserts that the Sultan of Turkey is dangerously ill.

The Tagblatt says: "A change in the ruler of Turkey is an accomplished fact. Abdul Hamid Effendi, a younger brother of Murad Effendi, is the regent of the empire."

ST. PETERSBURG, July 30.—The Golos publishes a special from Cettinje stating that a telegram was received from Prince Nickata, dated Grahora, July 28, saying that the Turks, under Mimkhtar Pacha, attacked us early to-day near Urbinza. A severe engagement ensued, and the fighting is still proceeding. We have broken through the Turkish lines. Osman Pacha was captured and brought here alive. We have taken many prisoners.

RAGUSA, July 30.—Advices from Sclavonic sources confirm the intelligence of the complete defeat of the Turks on the twenty-eighth instant, near Urbinza. The Montenegrins captured three hundred Nizams, besides Osman Pacha, five guns and several flags. The Turks attacked the Montenegrins at Kuschki, but were defeated. Selim Pacha was wounded.

LONDON, July 31.—Right Hon. and Most Rev. Samuel Butcher, D. D., Bishop of Meath, is dead.

The Standard's special from Kalapot says: The Turkish army crossed the Servian frontier at Mesa on Saturday. A great battle is expected, and great excitement prevails at the seat of war among Christians on account of a proclamation by Dervish Pacha, the Turkish commander in Bosnia, prohibiting quarter to Christians.

The Standard's Paratjia dispatch says there was a distressing want of medical stores in the hospital and much needless suffering.

The Standard's Ragusa special says Selim Pacha has been killed.

The News', Belgrade special says: Cafantitch, Gen. Zach's successor, is bombarding Senitoza, which commands the passes between Bosnia on one side and Novi Bazar and the country whence come supplies and reinforcements on the other. It is of vital importance to both combatants.

The News' Ragusa dispatch says that Monkhtar Pacha admits losing a thousand men in the fight with the Montenegrins.

A Times special telegram says the Turks at Tutza, after several hours' fighting, fled in an uncontrollable panic. The greater part of the army was lost. Belak is surrounded. There be a panic at Pretinjes. This disaster leaves Herzegovina practically defenseless.

PARIS, July 31. A motion will be made in the Chamber of Deputies demanding the execution of an unrepealed statute of 1828 for the expulsion of the Jesuits. The judgment recently obtained by the Jesuit newspaper will give impetus to the movement. Twenty country and ten Paris papers are implicated. The expense to each is 70,000 francs.

The Courier's special telegrams give details of massacres by the Turks in Bosnia. Three hundred Christians were tortured and drowned in the villages of Pervan and Timar; twelve women were cut to pieces at Pavles; sixty children were stoned to death at Rathlovo; one hundred and eighty girls were violated and murdered at Solavlove.

DEEP WATER AT THE JETTIES.—Twenty Feet in the Channel.—The appended telegram was received on Friday last:

PORT EADS, July 28, 1876.

C. W. R. Bayley, Resident Engineer, South Pass Jetties:

Lieut. Maguire, of the revenue cutter John A. Dix, who was officer of the day yesterday, and observed the soundings, coming in between the jetties in the central channel, informs me that the least depth found was nineteen and a half feet. This with the tide half a foot below average flood tide. The correction for the tide gives twenty feet as the least depth on the bar at average flood tide. E. L. CORTHELL,
Chief Assistant Engineer.

From the Work.

MR. EDITOR: At a quarter before five on the morning of July 3 I drove Prince through the last gate into the street of Lawrenceville, with wife and boys in the buggy, and set our faces southward and our hearts homeward. Notwithstanding the day was warm and the load considerable, yet twelve M. found us twenty-four miles from our "hired house," and found us at Bethel church. Bethel is known by many as the "Chitty church." Many years ago camp meetings were held at this place. In 1849 the writer, then a youth, attended a camp meeting at this church. At three in the afternoon of Sabbath, under the preaching of Rev. S. O. Capers, nephew of the Bishop, the writer was powerfully and pungently convicted. "The pangs of hell gat hold" of him, and he found rest and peace nowhere during one long, awful month. Then came "the peace that passeth all understanding." It was at this same great camp meeting that the writer first saw and heard the famous Jesse Corbit. "Uncle Jesse" was a man of prodigious size and wonderful voice. On Sabbath night he closed the pulpit services by singing, in melting sweetness, the "Hebrew Children," and delivering a powerful exhortation. It was a clear and beautiful and lovely night, and the preacher's voice, in utterances of matchless power and compass, took in the whole encampment. It was not long till intense shouts of heavenly triumph rent the circumambient air. At that time "Uncle Jesse" weighed three hundred and fifty pounds. Now he sleeps in Jesus, in the cemetery in Lawrenceville, awaiting the resurrection morn. Stephen Olin Capers sleeps in Mississippi.

After feeding Prince, and ourselves taking a hearty lunch, and resting, and then refreshing by the pure cold spring water and giving God thanks, we again rolled wheels, and by five in the afternoon found ourselves "safe and sound" in Ozark, Dale county, Ala.

During the entire route it was delightful to see the encouraging prospects of plenty for this and the coming year. The people say they have not had a better corn prospect for ten years. I have made several trips into that portion of the Marlana district this year, and thus far have seen but one ox cultivating a part of one plantation, to say nothing of one ox cultivating several patch plantations; and thus far, during the year, I have not seen a single ox pulling one cart, much less one, ox drowing "a large number of carts." In this section the farmers plow and drive as good and well-kept mules and horses as any in the State or South.

On Friday I left Ozark and came to Clopton, and on Saturday began my four days' meeting. The first hour was an occasion of good to many of the church. Considering that the farmers were not quite through with their field work, for the season, the congregations were pretty good—on Sunday at eleven very large. At ten on the morning of Tuesday was the best meeting we had.

This Clopton country has been productive of Methodist preachers, and has been generous in giving helpmates to preachers. The last contribution to the public was in the form of three handsome young doctors of medicine.

In this portion of the moral vineyard we want to turn the centennial year into practical account by reviving the religious fervor and vitality of one hundred years ago.

Many of the preachers in this part of the Conference are now entering upon their protracted meeting labors.

At present finances are hard to command; but then we live in hope. "And hope maketh not ashamed."

Yours in Christ,

ANGUS DOWLING.

LAWRENCEVILLE, ALA., July 17, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: The brethren at Armistead chapel, Louisiana, finding religion at a low ebb, conceived the idea of a week of prayer, and accordingly appointed Friday before my regular appointment—the second Sunday in July—for this good work, and began in good earnest. On their first coming together the Lord was graciously present and blessed the church, and thus for the entire week these faithful men and women of the Lord met and interceded with God in behalf of themselves and their sinful neighbors. We remained with them from Sunday evening until the close of the meeting; and, although there was but little preaching or exhortation, sinners were convicted and the altar was crowded with penitents at every opportunity. There were several conversions, five accessions to our branch of the church, and the church itself greatly revived. Impressions were made that will not soon fade, and we look for greater good to result from this meeting. The Lord be praised for his goodness to us.

JESSE FULTON, P. C.

JULY 20, 1876.

A Good Speech.

Gen. Francis T. Nicholls is the Democratic and Conservative candidate for Governor of Louisiana. From his speech, made on the occasion of his nomination, we make the following extract:

I wish to state to you, gentlemen, that I am speaking to you without preparation; however, I will state that if I be elected Governor of this State I will go and take my office untrammeled toward any man or set of men; that I will do my whole duty, and after the interval between this time and the time I shall take my oath as Governor of this State I shall cease to represent the Democratic party, and be the representative of the people—not of one set, but the whole. I recognize, gentlemen, each and every obligation incumbent upon me under the constitution of the United States and all the recent amendments thereto, and under the constitution of the State of Louisiana and the laws under them; and I propose, in so far as it is in my power, to enforce them, without regard to race, color or previous condition. In regard to the CIVIL SERVICE,

if I be elected to the office of Governor, I wish it distinctly understood that no friend of mine shall receive any appointment at my hands by reason of that fact. (Applause.) I wish it distinctly understood that any man, if there be such, who supported me in conviction or hope that I would so far forget myself as to give him personal consideration, he is woefully disappointed.

I propose to bring back a proper tone in public affairs. I propose to do right myself, and, in so far as I can control the doing right by other parties, I intend others shall do right.

There is one thing about which I wish to make mention. I refer to our

COLORED CITIZENS.

I believe, gentlemen, that you have selected as your standard-bearer to-day a man who has always felt kindly, in fact I don't know a man who has kinder feelings toward the colored people than I have. (Applause.) My record on that point does not date from to-day, nor from the war, but it goes back from the earlier period of my childhood, and it is well known among the colored people of Assumption; and I want them to know, and I want you to know, that I will unflinchingly protect them in all their rights. I feel satisfied that none of you are disposed to interfere or deprive any one of his rights, and if you are so disposed you will find me opposed to you. As I said before, if I should be elected by the people of this State, I want, when my administration shall close, to have it said that no man holding office under my appointment shall bear and be the proof of dishonesty, by the simple fact of his being a gentleman and an honest man. (Applause.)

That is my platform, gentlemen. Let us not go into side issues or false issues; let us not divert upon questions of tariff. What we are mainly interested in at present is the advocacy of honesty, integrity and good government. It is entirely futile for us to go into questions of tariff, because that is an issue in the national campaign.

Gentlemen, I have never sought this nomination; on the contrary, I would avoid the responsibilities which spring from this position. I know the honor of being your representative, indeed, but just as the honor is great the responsibilities are great, and they weigh me down much more than any personal consideration of ambition or feeling, by the simple fact of your regard. I say that I have not sought this nomination; but, inasmuch as you have selected me to be your head, all I can ask you is to trust me. Give me your confidence, and in giving it, with God's help and the assistance of all true men whether they be white or black, no matter what their shade or beliefs are, we will march forward to victory and the redemption of this State. (Applause.) I want it distinctly understood that I have no enemies to punish, and no friends to reward. (Applause.) The gentlemen who opposed me to-day were equally entitled to your confidence. I knew that somebody had to be deprived of the place for want of the necessary number of votes, and somebody had to be nominated, and it so chanced that it has fallen upon me. There is one point in regard to the conduct of the coming campaign, and that is that I am thoroughly, utterly and completely opposed to fraud, whether it comes from our side or comes from the other side. I want this election to be square, fair and peaceable. I want not simply the letter of the law followed, but also its spirit. I want every man who is entitled to vote to be permitted to do so. I want the ballot-boxes to be placed where the spirit of the law intended they should be placed, and where every citizen will be able to reach them. I want every ballot-box to be opened at the proper time, and that it shall be accessible to white and black. I want the ballot-boxes placed where everybody can see them. I want the votes counted in the presence of everybody, and the returns made in the presence of everybody. We have a right to ask that, and we shall insist that that shall be done. (Applause.) Nobody can complain of that—it is a right which is due to the other side and due to us, and we must exact it. Now, gentlemen, while you have conferred upon me a great honor I feel almost as if I would have preferred not having that honor, in view of the very great deficiency in my ability to justify your confidence. If I can succeed in doing what I know you want me to do, if I can succeed in carrying out what you expect of me, I will be proud that I am your representative. If I should, fail through lack of pains or want of judgment, or from any other cause make you regret your trust, I will look upon your nomination to-day as a great misfortune. I thank you, gentlemen, and I will attempt to do what is right. That is all you expect me to do, and I shall certainly do it. (Applause.)

Turkish Atrocities.

As a general rule the officers and soldiers of the regular army have behaved very well. Chevket Pacha is the most striking exception. The governors of many of the towns have not only done well, but in some cases have acted heroically. The government here has probably not ordered any general massacre of unarmed villagers, but it is directly responsible for these outrages, because it has known of them and made no effort to stop them, because it has ordered the disarming of the whole Bulgarian population, and then armed the Circassians and Bashi-Bazouks, and turned them loose upon these helpless towns. What has been done by these savages?

1. More than one hundred Bulgarian towns have been utterly destroyed, although no pretext of revolutionary movements existed in regard to more than five or six of these. A province formerly bringing in a revenue of £1,000,000 to the government has been devastated. The names of these towns and all particulars can be furnished to any one who wishes to see them.

2. At least 25,000 unarmed and inoffensive people have been massacred in cold blood. According to the Turkish papers of Constantinople, at least 40,000.

3. More than 1,000 Bulgarian children have been taken and sold as slaves. They have been sold publicly in the streets of Adrianople and Philippopolis.

4. Horrible tortures of every description have been inflicted on thousands of those not murdered.

5. The outrages upon women have been more general and more brutal than in any case I ever heard of. These outrages are more terrible because Bulgarian women have higher ideas of virtue and chastity than those of any other nationality in the East. If the women of England could know the facts such a cry of indignation would go up as would rouse all Europe to action.

6. At least 10,000 Bulgarians are now in prison, and are undergoing tortures, many of them such as have not been known in Europe since the middle ages, and which were formerly declared to be abolished in Turkey by the Sultan Abdul Medjid.

7. Many thousand refugees are crowded in the larger towns, where they suffer all kinds of abuse from the Turkish population, and are starving to death because the Bulgarians are not allowed to help them.
Pera Correspondence of London Times.

A correspondent furnishes us with the annexed account of the perilous adventures of Jake Rump: "Thirty-five years ago, or thereabouts, there lived in southwest Georgia a wiry-haired, carroty-headed, freckle-faced backwoodsman by the name of Jake Rump, who passed through the following perils before he arrived at the age of twenty-five years: He was stricken by lightning; then, on two separate occasions, he was bitten by rattlesnakes; then he was bitten by a cotton-mouth moccasin; afterward he was thrown from a wild horse, and had one arm and one leg broken. But a short time after recovering from his fractures he and a young brother, while searching for their cows late one afternoon, were attacked by a large panther, which caught Jake, dragged him at least the fourth of a mile to a dense hammock, where it deposited its prey and proceeded to cover him with leaves and brush. The panther was a huge animal, and had crushed Jake's shoulder there; yet he soon recovered. Soon after his shoulder healed up he made an attempt to run off with a neighbor's wife, was pursued, overtaken, shot, badly wounded, and was afterward stricken several times with a knife and left in the road as dead. In time he recovered, and stole from a neighbor a pig, for which he was sent to the penitentiary for a term of years, where I lost sight of him."—Savannah News.

Letter from Brazil.

SALTINHO, DISTRICT OF LOUREIA,
Province of San Pedro, Brazil,
April 9, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: I have frequently purposed writing something for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE during the last twelve months, but the full occupation of my time in farming and preaching has prevented me hitherto. But you have been so kind as to continue to send me the ADVOCATE without pay, that I am unwilling to receive so great a favor at your hands without trying at least to make some small return for your kindness; and I will in future try to write at least one short article per month for your paper.

There are many customs among this people that seem very strange to an American. For example:

THE BURIAL OF THE DEAD.

Among the Brazilians the burial of the dead is entirely in the hands of the priests. They have charge of the burying grounds, and of the coffins needed for burying the dead. They keep a supply of "candles," such as are suited to rich and poor, to burn for the dead, according to the usages of the Romish Church. As for coffins, they are never used by the poor. The body is simply wrapped up, and in this manner is handed over to the priest, who has the grave dug, etc.; and the "masses and candles" are in proportion to the money paid. The rich and well-to-do are buried in coffins, and when the body is carried to the grave it is accompanied by some of the friends of the deceased, but never by the members of the family. A man's own brothers or sisters never see him buried; nor does the wife or husband ever attend the burial of their consort, or parents their children.

When a death occurs in a family it is customary for all the friends of the family to make a visit of condolence, and it is expected that this visit should be made within a very few days after the burial. But this custom, so commendable when properly observed, is often performed in a most heartless manner. On a recent occasion a near neighbor of mine lost a very lovely and interesting daughter of five years of age. When I called on Sabbath evening to pay my visit of condolence I found a considerable number of the neighbors already there. In a back room the ladies were conversing in a serious and quiet manner with the bereaved mother; while in the parlor several men were around a table, playing cards for amusement, and others were looking on at the game, and none seemed to think the card-playing out of place.

Although this is an uncommonly healthy country, yet very many little children die among the natives—many more, in proportion, than among the Americans or the Germans. Indeed this is true of adults as well. The cause is the general ignorance of the laws of health, and of proper medical treatment. Small-pox is indeed terrible to the natives of all classes. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that one-half of those who have the disease die; and yet many of them neglect vaccination. When the disease appears in a town, all leave it who can, if they have not been vaccinated.

Yours fraternally,

J. E. NEWMAN.

The Oldest Gourd in the World.

MR. EDITOR: As this is the first centennial year of American liberty, and there is a bringing forth of things both old and new, I suppose there will be nothing improper in giving the history of the oldest gourd, I presume, in the world. I have it in my possession. It has passed through the hands of six generations. It was brought from Wales some time in the sixteenth century, by my father's great great grandfather. He settled in Virginia, and from there my grandfather came, about the year 1785, and settled in Mississippi, near where I now live. He lived to be eighty-six years old. You published my father's obituary, who died in July, 1870, aged eighty-seven years. I suppose they were long-lived people generally. My father told me this gourd was used for a powder gourd until after the Revolutionary war. Since then it has been strictly kept as an heirloom in the Williams family. It is of a dark mahogany color, and from long usage is as smooth and bright as if it had been varnished. Yours truly,

J. G. WILLIAMS.

A TRANSLATION.

FROM THE SPANISH OF FRANCIS XAVIER.

The rest thou giv'st to thine own,
My Saviour, moves me not to
To worship now before thy throne,
In deep humility;

Nor does that dread abode of sin,
Eternally to shun,
Incite my soul to strive to win
The joys at thy right hand;

But thou, my God, my heart dost thrill
With pity, anguish, shame,
When I behold thy Father's will,
And thine to us the same;

When I behold the bloody cross,
The nails, the spear, the thorn,
Those instruments of Satan's force
To wound thy sacred form;

When I remember thy distress,
Thy meekness all divine,
Thy prayer and thy forgiving love,
I own my heart is thine.

It is thy death which moveth me—
That death endured for me—
Which claims my soul, my highest love
For an eternity.

And were there no bright home above,
No sad abyss below,
My thoughts to thee in love would move,
In sweet affection flow.

Believers' Baptism.

MR. EDITOR: The baptism of believers, and believers only, is much harped on by one denomination, and, as far as it relates to adults, advocated by the Methodist Episcopal Church South—that is, her ministers would not baptize an unbeliever, or one who does not believe that Jesus Christ is the promised Messiah; but, like Peter, are willing to baptize every penitent that makes the inquiry: "Men and brethren, what must we do?" The question arises, then: Were those that made that inquiry on the day of Pentecost converted before they were baptized? In one sense they were; as truly expressed by Dr. Adam Clarke. He says the Greek verb, rendered were added, "was used by Greek writers to signify that not by which cities, towns or provinces changed their masters, and put themselves under another government. So these three thousand persons left the scribes and Pharisees, and put themselves under the teaching of the apostles." They were then converted from Judaism to Christianity. But were they, in a strictly theological sense, converted, made new creatures in Christ Jesus, born again? Or did they, prior to their baptism, exercise that saving faith that precedes justification? Their inquiry and the answer of Peter both negative these questions. They were simply awakened—convinced that he whom they crucified was the promised Messiah. Their language was the language of penitents, and the answer of Peter was just such an one as should be given to penitents: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." They were instructed to repent. This was all that John required before baptism, and, seems to be all that Peter required. With this repentance, the renunciation of Judaism, and the assent of the mind that the crucified Savior is the promised Messiah, they were rendered proper subjects to be baptized in the name of Jesus, and thereby be brought into a covenant relation to Christ. They were told that they must be "baptized for the remission of sins," or, as Dr. Clarke renders the Greek: "In reference to the remission or remoral of sins." The design of baptism is, first, to bring the subject into a covenant relation to Christ; and, second, to point out or prefigure the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Hence the instructions of Peter: Do what God requires of you, repent and be baptized; show by these acts that you are willing to be a co-worker with God in the salvation of your souls; show that you are in earnest, and trust God for the pardon of your sins and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Do these things, "and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." From this analysis it seems plain that the sins of the three thousand on the day of Pentecost were not remitted, nor did they receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, until they had made a public acknowledgment of Christ by being baptized; nor even then until what they believed (pisteuo) relative to Christ was succeeded by a saving faith (pistis.) It is evident, then, that the three thousand that were baptized on the day of Pentecost were only believers historically, and willing to forsake Judaism—forsake their sins, and do all in their power, leaving the result in the hands of the Almighty.

Again, when "Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them, and the people with one accord gave heed unto the things which Philip spake, ... and when they believed (pisteuo) Philip's preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. Then Simon believed (pisteuo) also; and when he was baptized he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done." "Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost; for as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of Jesus." Now when Simon, who with others believed and was baptized, saw that those on whom the apostles laid their hands received the Holy Ghost, offered them money, saying, "Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands may receive the Holy Ghost." Now, notice Peter's reply to him, who with many others believed (pisteuo) and were baptized: "I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity." It is a clear case, then, that the Samaritans, prior to the visit of Peter and John, only believed, or gave the assent of the mind to what Philip preached, and with that belief not faith that abideth they were baptized.

One more case will be sufficient on this point. When Philip joined himself to the eunuch, and preached a sermon to him from that prophecy concerning Christ, as recorded in Isaiah, commencing at the thirteenth verse of the fifty second chapter, and embracing the whole of the fifty-third, "the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe (pisteuo) that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." It is a least inferable, then, that the eunuch's belief, when baptized, was only what some denominate a historical faith, or assent of the mind to the truths preached by Philip. It is, I might say, a certainty that Philip not only preached that Jesus, the crucified, is the Messiah, but also the mode, nature and design of baptism; for in that prophecy he had a good text to preach from: "So shall he sprinkle many nations." Hence the eunuch's request.

In conclusion I will add that I have sought diligently, both in the English and Greek New Testament, and have not found one case where faith, saving faith, faith that abideth (pistis,) was required as a preliminary to the administration of the sacrament of baptism. Nor can I find but one single case where the gift of the Holy Ghost was given, and the recipients received new hearts as well as new tongues, and were enabled to "magnify God," before they were baptized; and that is the case of Cornelius and his household.

As baptism, like circumcision, only brings the subject into a covenant relation to Christ, and is a type of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, it does seem reasonable that the covenant relation and type should precede the antitype; and which would always be the case in the Methodist Church if all parents would discharge their duty toward their children in having them brought into a covenant relation to Christ by baptism, and then point to them that Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, and teach them to pray, as expressed by Charles Wesley in that beautiful hymn on an indwelling God:

"Come, Holy Ghost, thy heart inspire
Attest that I am born again!
Come and baptize me with fire;
Nor let thy former gifts be vain."

Crystal Springs Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: In your note from Crystal Springs you use figures representing the expenditures of the Henington Camp Meeting Association that might lead others into embarrassment by causing them to begin to build without first properly counting the cost.

This enterprise was begun under embarrassing conditions. Camp meetings had been a failure. Rowdyism had overrun them; the government was unsettled, money was scarce, and embarrassment everywhere. There were unencouraging predictions on every side, and at the most inopportune times and places. Four men, one of them Maj. W. D. Perry, a member of my church, confiding in each other, determined to make the effort, relying upon God and his wisdom to sustain their judgment and nerve. One of them, who is now in heaven, had some ready cash to spare. Economy was to be the order of the day. No money was to be spent where it could be substituted. The land was contracted for, material purchased, mechanics employed, and the hauling, rough work, etc., thrown in. So the enterprise moved forward.

A liberal community, inspired by their confidence in the nerve rather than in the judgment of the leaders, now came forward to the help. Five tents, a restaurant, a preachers' tent and a nucleus shed were built. But, alas! Isaac J. Henington, the leader, had fallen a victim to typhoid fever, and Maj. Terry had broken down under nervous prostration. Still, the work went forward to completion.

The first meeting came on; preachers and an attentive congregation assembled. Rowdyism was met and nipped in the bud. The most rigid rules of decorum were given and responded to. The preached gospel became the power of God unto salvation. Many souls were converted, and Henington camp meeting became a fixed fact.

Rigid economy, individual effort, and no cumbering debt, has been the motto, and gradual development the theory. So closely has this motto been adhered to that a few days before the first camp meeting, the funds being exhausted, and there being no sleeping tent, three members, by compact, met from their own pockets the expenses of building and fitting up one. Much has been done in this enterprise upon the rule: "Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth." Besides this, various matters of importance have never entered into its financial statistics. For instance, in the yearly arrangements for the rent of the boarding tent from $75 to as high as $160 worth of improvements have been included, which amount never entered the financial statistics.

The writer has been chairman of the executive committee since the organization of the association, and the whole work has passed under his supervision, and he is not prepared to say that fifty per cent. of the money, or its equivalent, that has been expended has found its way into the financial statistics, which only show what disposition has been made of cash received in the regular channels.

However much the committees have at times found themselves embarrassed by impecuniosity, we are ignorant of an instance in which that embarrassment has hindered their efficiency. The enterprise has moved onward and upward; those who have sacrificed most, enjoying most and complaining least. Hundreds of souls date their life from it. The probabilities are wonderful for the future among those who love it with a sense of the responsibilities they have brought upon themselves, and their own inability to husband its facilities and bring them to the glory of God. But we trust that he who has guided us in the past will be our wisdom for the future.

I. V. ENOCHS.

Christian Consolation.

There is scarcely anything that affords the Christian a greater consolation than the possession of "a conscience void of offense toward God and man." The remembrance of former sins, that were once so great a burden, is a souvenir of the confirmation of a blessed peace with God. It is true the remembrance of sin brings a momentary sadness to the Christian's heart; but it comes not laden with that feeling of condemnation that crushes the soul of the unbelieving sinner. It is sorrow after a godly sort. It gives an impetus to his zeal. It urges him on with greater determination, lest haply by relaxing his energy he again fall into condemnation.

The religion of Jesus Christ is adapted to all ranks and conditions of mankind; and to all it brings the same consolation and support. The man of royal birth and the peasant of the valley may share alike of its joys. And indeed they who are happiest in the things of this world do not always enjoy religion most. A sad face and a wretched lot may be possessed by a cheerful and happy heart:

"For the lowliest of earth's lowly sons
May be a prince in disguise."

Some there are who, being less tried by mental affliction, are the more greatly tried by bodily diseases. But God, in his ever-beneficent providence, has devised consolation for even the wretched imbecile. Though the clouds of disease lower upon the May morn of life, we have for consolation but to lift the eye of faith to the land of "immortal youth," and where fever and pains are unknown.

The comforts of the meanest follower of Jesus Christ are a thousand-fold greater than those of the inhabitant of the palaces of vice. And indeed the only solid comforts of this world are derived from the exercise of practical Christianity—such comforts as are not discovered in the complicated systems of Grecian philosophy, nor the boasted theories of the infidel. Though the skeptic labors to destroy the Christian faith, it only possesses that peace for which he sighs. It only possesses that principle necessary to man's intellectual and moral existence.

A religion that does not engage every faculty of the mind, every desire of the heart, is incapable of saving the soul. If all our energies are confined to the pursuit of a single object, we are content in the contemplation of that object; and this is doubly true in religion. If our aspirations tend heavenward, when trials come our souls will be transported beyond the confines of this existence, and, though still in the flesh, we will be admitted to sweet communion with God.

"Religion bears our spirits up,
While we expect that blessed hope—
The bright appearance of the Lord;
And faith stands leaning on his word."

Montgomery Male and Female High School.

MR. EDITOR: The examination exercises of the Montgomery Male and Female High School, located in West Wilcox county, Ala., in charge of Rev. William A. Montgomery, of the Alabama Conference, closed yesterday, June 30, and it affords us pleasure to state that so far the school is a success.

The session closed with forty pupils, which represents the minimum attendance, the roll showing that as many as seventy-four have been in school, several having stopped during the last two months, some to teach, some on account of sickness, and others to go on the farm. The examination of the classes, which consumed the whole of Thursday and a part of Friday morning, was thorough, and gave evidence of great painstaking and untiring energy on the part of the principal and his assistants. The speeches and compositions were good, showing that rapid improvement had been made in declamation and rhetoric.

We deeply regret to state that Bro. Montgomery, for reasons satisfactory to himself, has resigned his position as principal of this institution of learning, and will in all probability teach at Lower Peachtree. Notwithstanding the disappointment experienced by the community at this rather unexpected announcement, he takes with him the confidence and best wishes of all among whom he has for the last ten months so zealously labored to promote the cause of education and religion.

At a meeting of the board of trustees on Friday, June 30, Mr. M. D. Thompson was elected principal for the ensuing session, and we congratulate him as the successor of one so extensively known as a thorough and successful educator as Bro. Montgomery, and bespeak for him a liberal share of the public patronage. Good board can be obtained near the school at $8.50 per calendar month, including lights, and tuition at $2, $2.50 and $3 per scholastic month.

Yours truly,

GEO. FONTAINE,
Sec. Board of Trustees.

A Wrong Impression.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in a communication of "Loyaute," in behalf of Centenary Female College, in your issue of the sixth instant, that the writer was evidently laboring under a wrong impression in reference to the address of Col. L. W. Reeves, before the young ladies of Centenary. The writer says that one-half hour was granted to Col. Reeves, by his own special request, to read a homily on slander to the good people of Summerfield.

Upon inquiry on the subject I find that President McVoy requested Col. Reeves to deliver an address to his young ladies, and Col. Reeves prepared his address on "gossips" some months before, and without reference to the people of Summerfield. The address was well received, and a number were so favorably impressed with it, the ability displayed, and the appropriateness of its treatment, that they desired to have it published.

This is simple justice to Col. Reeves, to show that he does not deserve such a remark.

Yours, etc., E. S. STARR.

SELMA, July 21, 1876.

A SCENE FROM LIFE.—A young man entered the bar-room of a village tavern and called for a drink. "No," said the landlord, "you have had delirium tremens once, and I cannot sell you any more." He stepped aside, to make room for a couple of young men who had just entered, and the landlord waited upon them very politely. The other had stood by, silent and sullen, and when they had finished he walked up to the landlord and thus addressed him: "Six years ago, at their age, I stood where those young men are now. I was a man with fair prospects. Now, at the age of twenty-eight, I am a wreck, body and mind. You fed me to drink. In this room I formed the habit that has been my ruin. Now sell me a few glasses more, and your work will be done! I shall soon be out of the way; there is no hope for me. But they can be saved. Do not sell it to them. Sell to me, and let me die, and the world will be rid of me; but for Heaven's sake sell no more to them." The landlord listened, pale and trembling. Setting down his decanter, he exclaimed: "God help me; this is the last drop I will ever sell to any one!" And he kept his word.

There are pauses amidst study, and even pauses of seeming idleness, in which a process goes on which may be likened to the digestion of food. In those seasons of repose the powers are gathering their strength for new efforts—as land which lies fallow and recovers itself for tillage.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

SISTER AUARILLA VICTORIA BRYAN, wife of R. D. Bryan, of Marion station, Lauderdale county, Miss., was born in Greene county, Ala., on the thirteenth day of March, 1841, and died at her home Marion, Miss., on the thirteenth day of June, 1876, of that fearful disease, bronchitis, aged thirty-five years and three months. She suffered long, though patiently. We learned the following facts from her bereaved husband: "Her mother died when she was but seven months old, leaving her to the guardianship of her aunt, Mrs. Sarah A. Clinton, of Marion, Miss.; and never was trust more faithfully exercised than by that good and pious lady. She was for many years the pupil of Mrs. Nicholson, of Kemper county, Miss., a distinguished teacher and a model of piety. My wife joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at an early age; had many friends in east Mississippi, where she was raised and educated. We were married on the thirty-first of December, 1863. I lived at that time in Camden, Ala. Our married life was indeed a blissful one. Our pleasant little home at Marion, surrounded with its comforts, and our merry children, were our delight. In health she has often said that when Mr. Bryan was satisfied she was perfectly happy. In her extreme sufferings she often exclaimed: 'Lord, have mercy upon me.' She had often prayed that she might not die suddenly, and felt that her prayers had been answered; said she was ready, and only regretted leaving her husband and children."

The writer was well acquainted with this excellent Christian lady for eight years. Six years of that time I was her pastor. Her enjoyment of religion was not of an excitable nature, but deep and solid. She loved the church very much, and also the ministers, and was exceedingly anxious for them to visit her on all occasions. Sister Bryan's love for God and his people was without dissimulation, and her faith in Christ was unfeigned. She always possessed a quiet, calm and even temperament, and apparently took things in this life as they came, without a murmur. In her protracted affliction we never heard one word of complaint escape her lips. We deeply sympathize with the bereaved husband and his three beautiful children; but their loss is her gain. She was a good neighbor, a faithful wife and an affectionate mother. We have lost one of our brightest jewels. Thus lived and suffered a devoted sister until the thirteenth day of June, 1876, when her spirit was released from a diseased body, to be with redeemed spirits made perfect in the paradise of God.

MRS. ELIZABETH GANTT, whose maiden name was Watkins, was born in South Carolina, March 12, 1803, and died of apoplexy, at the residence of her son, near Center Grove church, in Holmes county, Miss., July 5, 1876, in the seventy-fourth year of her age. In November, 1822, she was first married to John W. White, and after his death she was again married, to Thomas Roberts, February 12, 1828. A while previous to this second marriage she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church, in which she lived and died an honored member. Being a Christian from principle, she ever lived a devoted, consistent life. She was truly pious, and always lived in the enjoyment of religion. She was called upon to bury another husband, and was again married to William Gantt, November 12, 1851, who also sleeply died. So she buried three husbands and eleven children, and leaves but one son (J. A. Roberts) to bury the mother. Sister Gantt was a woman of great faith, and believed much in prayer, and often received unmistakable answers to prayer. During the recent war (in 1863) when the Southern army was defeated at Fishing Creek, Ky., news reached home that all the company was killed in which she had a son. She went to prayer, and asked the Lord if her son was killed. She arose, returned to her friends, and told them she was perfectly satisfied, for Jimmy was not killed; and so it was. Her son was quite wicked. She prayed for his conversion. A protracted meeting came off at Center Grove, conducted by Rev. George W. Brown. Sister Gantt was absent a day's ride. She prayed all the time that her wicked boy might be converted in that meeting. Coming from her room, where she had been praying, she said to a friend: "You must take me home. Jimmy is converted at Center Grove. I must go and see him." On arriving home she found him happy in the love of God converted just at the time she said he was. Other instances of her faith in prayer might be given, but enough now. She long had a desire that when she came to die she might not linger and suffer. For this she prayed. She cooked her dinner, put all things in preparation for the evening, laid down and died, without a struggle or a groan. So calmly did she die that it seemed as if she had just gone to sleep. So passed away from earth a child of God, in the full triumph of faith, to rest forever.

WILLIAM SMYLY was born in Edgefield district, S. C., July 10, 1800, and died of dropsy, in Whistler, Ala., June 29, 1876—an old man, and full of years. When a young man he came to this State and settled at Pleasant Hill, Dallas county, where he professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in his twenty-third year, of which he remained a member about twenty years, and for reasons satisfactory to his own mind he united with the Baptist Church, in which he lived an active, useful and pious member until the day of his death.

When first admitted to the knowledge of the truth he determined, by grace, to make his calling and election sure, and to realize the full fruition of the purchased possession; and, being endowed with a strong mind and will, he never yielded to the tempter's solicitations by which so many have been led into the snare of the devil. Neither the solicitations of the bacchanalian, the sentiment, whirl of the ball-room, nor the false promises of fortune at the card table or the lottery shambles, could divert him from the path of virtue. To all these he gave but one answer: "Get thee behind me, satan. Thou art an offense unto me."

He loved the Sunday school as the nursery of the church, where the children are to be trained in the doctrines of the gospel of Christ and directed into the way of holiness. In this glorious work he engaged with all the energy of his mind and heart.

In the beginning of his religious career he erected a family altar, around which he and his family seldom failed to gather for the purpose of offering the sacrifices of supplication, prayer and thanksgiving.

For some time his health had been declining, and his great desire and earnest prayer was that he might close his life without extreme suffering. This was granted in part, as his severe sufferings were of short duration.

On my first visit, when he was rapidly declining, I asked him about his future destiny. He answered in a calm and firm tone of voice: "I would not give my hope of heaven for all this world, if it were mine." The funeral services were performed by the writer in the presence of his friends and dear ones, with the full assurance of his eternal salvation.

JOHN BUTCHER was born in Switzerland, April 15, 1[illegible], and died at his home near Lauderdale station, Lauderdale county, Miss., May [illegible], aged seventy-seven years and seven days. Bro. Butcher was raised in the Episcopal Church from childhood until he came to America, in the tenth year of his age, landing in Mission after which he was married to [illegible] He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church and remained a consistent member until death. He moved to Mississippi in 1[illegible], settled in Lauderdale county, He raised eleven children—nine sons and two daughters—and lived to see them all members of the church of his choice, of which he was an honored member for thirty-seven years. I knew him well.

We enjoyed many seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord in communing with him, while in good health, especially in his protracted affliction, which lasted for five months. We visited him [illegible] twice a month as his pastor. We found him happy, though suffering much with the grand disease of the heart and dropsy. Nevertheless he was happy in the Savior's love. We prayed and talked with him as ever, and found him [illegible] Bro. Butcher was an honest, [illegible] Christian gentleman—perhaps had a few faults as any man with whom we were acquainted. He was liberal to the cause and the poor, and a great lover of Methodism and her ministry, as many of our preachers of the Alabama and Mississippi Conferences testify. His pastor was sent for at the house of God when able to go. He was peaceable in the community, [illegible] spirit, unostentatious in his departure as a Methodist of the right type. In [illegible] Soule chapel has lost one of her best members, the community one of its most [illegible] and best neighbors, the county a [illegible] citizen, and his children a very affectionate father.

J. C. BIGGAN.

MRS. SUSAN F., wife of D. C. Peeples, was born May 14, 1831, and departed from the cares of earth April 12, 1876.

She was punctually converted, and clearly and happily converted at Morrisville [illegible] a protracted meeting in the year 1[illegible]. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year of [illegible] conversion, and was faithful until death. She had an experience of grace; hence she enjoyed the comfortable witness of the Holy Spirit. As she approached the margin of the last river she rejoiced at the thought that her sorrows would cease, and she was soon to be exchanged for the rest in reserve for the faithful.

In this county the declaration of the blessed Jesus is being effectually developed: "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." And I think I can recognize the fact that many of such have heard the truth to profit.

R. G. RADER.

MRS. M. S. ALLEN died in Clayton county, Ala., May 15, 1876, at the age of twenty-eight years, two months and twenty-two days.

She sought and obtained pardon and peace, and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1862. She was raised by pious and devoted parents, and she never lost sight of her training. When she neared the shadow of death her consolation was entirely about the ordeal through which she was soon to pass. She admonished every one who came about her to prepare for heaven, and entreated each and every one to meet her in the "better land." She had three little children to leave with their papa in this heartless world; but her faith was in God, and she said that he would care for them and watch over her motherless little ones. Her last breath was spent in prayer and praise.

LITTLE SARAH HASTINGS MELLEN, only daughter of Prof. S. S. and [illegible] H. Mellen, of Mount Sterling, Ala., was suddenly taken from us, July 7, 1876, aged one year and nine months. Oh, how sad our hearts! Sweet little Sarah, whom we much loved,

"Thy days with us were few—
An angel's courtship's visit,
That came and vanished with the dew."

We hear no more her little pattering footsteps in the hall, nor her sweet angel voice singing "Happy day" at early morning, nor her little "fly-by" at evening. In her sickness she would say: "Sing, mamma, sing." She has joined the angels around the throne on high, singing praises to him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

BIFROST, THE RAINBOW BRIDGE.

A NORSE LEGEND.

Then the Immortals stood in light
First, on the archway of the skies,
The hoods of seven-fold glory bright,
All thrilling with a sweet surprise.

They triumphed in that shining place—
Balder the beautiful and Frey,
And all of Asgard's stately race,
New-born, and radiant from on high.

And their strong brother, who had gone,
Perforce, through storm and cloud and wrath,
Before them, walked the bridge alone,
And proved his way the quicker path.

And there are those who lightly tread
Unfired upon the rainbow bridge;
Celestial airs of heaven play round the head,
Serene they student its fairy ridge.

Others there are who, lost and blind,
Struggle in mist and maze and dark;
Yet all they love and long for, find,
Without a path or guiding spark.

Not sooner reach the gleaming goal
Than they who freely mount aloft,
Where color warms the happy soul,
In rays concentric, pulses soft.

Take courage, then, ye sons of strength,
Who fain must struggle night and day;
Be quivering, ye gain your peace at length;
The dark way is the shorter way.

Profitable Hospitality.

Some people express great anxiety that their Christian neighbors should be eaten out of house and home by having in so many strangers, preachers and what not, as they do. And it is somehow they do not often have the pleasure of following such people to the almshouse, nor are they often called upon to relieve their necessities, in some way or other the Lord seems to remember the cup of cold water given in the disciples' name. The widow and her son at Zarephath might have starved to death if the ravens had not sent along a free dinner, in the shape of a persecuted prophet, to help to eat the last handful of the widow's meal, and assure them that it should not fail till the Lord sent rain upon the earth. And often a visit or many bring a blessing, that in soul or in body or in business, in purse, the gain from the visits of the Lord's servants may far exceed the cost and trouble of their entertainment.

Capt. McCabe tells in the Christian Standard the following story of a prominent and prosperous lawyer, who may be congratulated upon his comfortable surroundings:

"Well," said the lawyer, "all my good fortune began by inviting a Methodist preacher home to dinner. Come, sit down and I will tell you about it. Many years ago, when I was a new county, and very sparsely populated, there came to the little settlement where I lived intelligence that upon the following Sabbath the Methodist circuit-rider would preach in our town. It was a great event to have a sermon, and the congregation was very good. I was an unconverted man, but, wicked as I was, I could not help feeling a great regard for those heroic itinerants, who, on poor pay and poor fare, founded the church in this wilderness. There were but few Methodists in the settlement, and after the sermon I watched them, to see if any one would invite the preacher home to dinner. Some in the congregation took hands with him, but after while I was left alone with him. He was leaning against the rude pulpit with a tired look upon his face, and I thought I detected also a shade of disappointment.

"There was a hotel in the place, but those days Methodist preachers had very little money to pay their way at the hotels. Without an abiding hospitality the church never could have been planted as it is in this great West. I approached him, shook his hand, and said: 'I am a sinner, sir, but if you will go home with me my wife and I will be glad to take care of you.'

"He gladly accepted my invitation. His horse was soon comfortably fed in my little barn, and the preacher was sitting at my table, and seemed to me the first perfectly at home. As long as he was on the circuit he was a welcome guest at our hearthstone. Others invited him, but he always seemed glad to get back to our house. A great revival followed his labors, and among the first fruits were my friend myself. We were both converted and joined the church, and from that time to this all has gone well with me. That preacher was God's messenger to us all. My children were converted early in life. They made other acquaintances among the ministry, but there was one whose memory we always cherished with peculiar respect and love, and whose name was a household word.

"One evening I brought a letter from the postoffice, addressed to my wife. I threw it in her lap. She was not just where she is now. Laying down my evening paper, I began to read, when I was startled by a sob. I looked up, and saw that my wife was weeping bitterly, and she was still holding that letter in her hand. In great alarm I inquired what had happened. 'John,' she said, 'George Knell has been superannuated at conference. His health has utterly broken down; he can never take another appointment. He has no home, no money, nothing but the forty allowance from the Conference fund.' And then she came over and sat down by my side. 'John,' she said, 'you know what a blessing it was to us. I have one request to make. You have a house in this town to rent. Let it be vacated. Let it be furnished comfortably and thoroughly. I will write to him this very day and tell him all about it.'

"In thirty days the superannuate came with his family and took possession of their home. He rallied, but after a few months consumption did its work, and we all gathered about him to see him die. He was going down into the valley and I by his side holding his hand; during he might have some little lingering anxiety about his family, I saw him looking from one to another of the little group, I whispered, 'George, don't be troubled about them. I'll take care of them all.' The look he gave me paid me over and over again for all I had ever done for him, and left the original debt still unacknowledged.

"And so it came that all my earthly prosperity, as well as spiritual, seemed to begin with that invitation to a weary itinerant to come home to dinner with me.

"As we separated for the night, two passages from the word of the Lord were chiming away in all our hearts: 'Use hospitality without grudging;' 'Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.'"—The Christian.

A Word In Season.

"Never," said the late Rev. Thomas Mortimer, "lose an opportunity of speaking to your fellow-creatures about their souls and the world to come. Once," he added, "I sat with a military officer for a considerable time, waiting to see a gentleman, and I said not a word to him about his soul. I lost that opportunity, much to my regret. Never," he subjoined, "lose an opportunity."

The writer, who heard these remarks from the lips of Mr. Mortimer in one of his pithy sermons, now five-and-twenty years ago, well remembers the impression they produced on his mind, and their effect on his conduct in that particular. O what a luxury is contact with other minds about eternal things! Often it establishes a bond of heartfelt brotherhood, and engenders a double spring of love between them.

In a Sunday morning walk to look after the neglecters of public worship, an aged man of comely aspect, helping a large body along with a pair of crutches, was accosted with the following salutation: "I hope you are going where you will have no need for crutches. There will be no lame legs in heaven."

With a dejected countenance and a touching utterance he replied: "I'm not going there. I am too great a sinner to go to heaven."

"So am I," I replied; "in myself considered; but Christ has died for sinners, and his blood cleanseth from all sin, and if you and I do not go to Heaven it is our own fault." "Him that cometh to me," the Savior said, "I will in no wise cast out."

The burden of sin lay heavy on my aged neighbor's mind, and well-nigh excluded the hope of eternal life.

"I am too great a sinner," again he said, "to go to heaven."

To this it was replied with the words of Isaiah i, 16: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." As the sequel will show, this was made, by divine application, "a word in season."

At parting his name and address were taken, and an early visit made to his house, where he was found reading the Bible. Conversation and prayer, in which he heartily joined, concluded the interview. At our next meeting light began to enter his mind; and on a subsequent occasion, when the first verse of Isaiah lv was commenced, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters," he instantly, with joyful tips, exclaimed: "And he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price." And with evident, heartfelt pathos he repeated the remaining part of the chapter.

Before we parted that day, looking through his tears to the cross, he repeated the hymn:

Come, Thou Fount of every blessing;
Tune my heart to sing Thy grace!
Streams of mercy, never ceasing,
Call for songs of loudest praise.
Jesus sought me when a stranger,
Wandering from the fold of God;
He, to rescue me from danger,
Interposed His precious blood.

Nor were these words the result of transient emotion and influence. No; his heart is fixed, trusting in God, through faith in the atonement of Christ, and waiting to be an inhabitant of the heavenly Jerusalem.

Brethren, let us ever keep in remembrance the exhortation of Mr. Thomas Mortimer, who, being dead, yet speaketh. Never let us lose an opportunity of speaking about the soul and the world to come to our fellow-travelers to eternity.—The Christian.

The Lioness and the Terrier.

The report of the Royal Zoological Society of Ireland, presented to the members at the forty-fourth annual meeting, held in Dublin two months ago, states that "during the year the gardens sustained a heavy loss in the death of the beautiful lioness familiarly called 'Old Girl.' She was born in the gardens, of South African stock, on the eighth of September, 1859, and died on the seventh of October, 1875, after six weeks of prostration from chronic bronchitis. During her long and honored career she presented the gardens with fifty-four cubs, of which she actually reared fifty, losing only four. This is a feat unprecedented in the annals of menageries and gardens. She was a lioness of very high spirit, although very gentle, and was admitted by judges to be the handsomest lioness they had ever seen. It may be added that her offspring not only added to the attractions of the gardens, but that the judicious sale of a portion of them brought £1,100 in cash for the benefit of the society."

"The closing weeks of her interesting life were marked by a touching incident worthy of being recorded. The carnivora, when in health, have no objection to the presence of rats in their cages; on the contrary, they rather welcome them as a relief to the monotony of existence, which constitutes the chief trial of a wild animal in confinement. Thus it is a common sight to see half a dozen rats gnawing the bones off which the lions have dined, while the satisfied carnivora look on contentedly, giving the poor rats an occasional wink with their sleepy eyes. In illness the case is different, for the ungrateful rats begin to nibble the toes of the lord of the forest before his death, and add considerably to his discomfort.

"To save our favorite lioness from this annoyance, we placed in her cage a fine little rat-tan terrier, who was at first received with a sulky growl; but when the first rat appeared, and the lioness saw the little terrier toss him into the air, catching him with professional skill across the loins with a snap as he came down, she began to understand what the terrier was for; she coaxed him to her side, folded her paw around him, and each night the little terrier slept at the breast of the lioness enfolded with her paws, watching that his natural enemies did not disturb the rest of his mistress. The rats had a bad time during those six weeks."—Children's Friend.

How Messages Are Sent by Ocean Cable.

He (the ocean telegraph operator) taps the "key" as in a land telegraph, only it is a double key. It has two levers and knobs, instead of one. The alphabet used is substantially like the Morse alphabet—that is, the different letters are represented by a combination of dashes and dots. For instance, suppose you want to write the word "boy." It would read like this: "—... — — — —." B is one dash and three dots; O, three dashes; and Y, one dash, one dot and three dashes. Now in the land telegraph the dashes and the dots would appear on the strip of paper at the other end of the line, which is unwound from a cylinder, and perforated by a pin at the end of the bar or armature. If the operator could read by sound we would dispense with the strip of paper, and read the message by the "click" of the armature as it is pulled down and let go by the electro-magnet.

The cable operator, however, has neither of these advantages. There is no paper to perforate, no "click" of the armature, no armature to "click." The message is read by means of a moving flash of light upon a polished scale produced by the "deflection" of a very small mirror, which is placed within a "mirror-galvanometer," which is a small brass cylinder two or three inches in diameter, shaped like a spool or bobbin, composed of several hundred turns of small wire wound with silk to keep the metal from coming in contact. It is wound or coiled exactly like a bundle of new rope, a small hole being left in the middle about the size of a common wooden pencil. In the center of this is suspended a very thin, delicate mirror about as large as a kernel of corn, with a correspondingly small magnet rigidly attached to the back of it. The whole weighs but a little more than a grain, and is suspended by a single fiber of silk, much smaller than a human hair, and almost invisible. A narrow horizontal scale is placed within a darkened box two or three feet in front of the mirror, a narrow slit being cut in the center of the scale to allow a ray of light to shine upon the mirror from a lamp placed behind said scale, the little mirror in turn reflecting the light back upon the scale. This spot of light upon the scale is the index by which all messages are read. The angle through which the ray moves is double that traversed by the mirror itself; and it is, therefore, really equivalent to an index four or six feet in length without weight.

To the casual observer there is nothing but a thin ray of light, darting to the right and left with irregular rapidity; but to the trained eye of the operator every flash is replete with intelligence. Thus the word "boy" already alluded to would be read in this way: One flash to the right and three to the left is B. Three flashes to the right is O. One to the right, one to the left, and two more to the right is Y, and so on. Long and constant practice makes the operators wonderfully expert in their profession, and enables them to read from the mirror as readily and as accurately as from a newspaper.—Boston Herald.

Chesterfield and Voltaire, born in the same year (1694,) were warm and life-long friends. Whatever may have been the erratic Frenchman's vagaries and mirths—for he never had a friend whom he did not at some time abuse—Lord Chesterfield was too much of a gentleman to take offense, or even notice.

On a certain occasion the two friends were in company at a grand ball in Paris, given by the King's favorite. Chesterfield stood by a marble pillar, gazing upon the brilliant assemblage of ladies, when Voltaire accosted him:

"My lord, you should be a judge in such matters. Now, seriously, do you not think our French ladies the most beautiful you ever saw?"

"Upon my word," replied Chesterfield, with a nod and a smile, "I am not a judge of paintings."

Not long afterward Voltaire crossed over to England, and was present one evening at a party given by an English nobleman in London. A lady in the company, sparkling in jewels, and highly rouged, was particularly attentive to the noted Frenchman, engrossing most of his discourse. Chesterfield, observing, came up and tapped his friend on the shoulder.

"Be wary, monsieur, or you will be captivated."

"No fear, my lord," quickly retorted Voltaire. "I am not to be captured by an English craft sailing under French colors!"—Ledger.

Theodore Hook didn't always make the jokes. Here is one he heard: He was in a stage coach with two inside passengers—a pretty, delicate young lady and a plain-faced maid. While the mistress was at dinner Hook remarked to the maid in a tone of great sympathy: "Your young lady seems very unwell." "Yes, sir; she suffers sadly." "Consumption, I should fear." "No, sir; I am sorry to say it is the heart." "Dear me! Aneurism?" "Oh, no, sir! It is only a lieutenant in the navy."

It is nothing short of cruelty and a murder to allow school children to sit up late at night or to hurry them from their beds in the morning.

I've never any pity for conceited people, because I think they carry their comfort about with them.—George Eliot.

Religious Intelligence.

—In Father Boehm's autobiography it was stated that the Virginia Conference, in Asbury's time, had eighty-seven ministers, two of whom were Bishops, and only three of the eighty-seven were married.

—Old Strawberry Lane church, occupied before old Light street, the oldest Methodist Episcopal church in Baltimore, occupied by the colored Methodists since 1801, is to be sold for public school purposes.

—The Bible has never been translated into the Japanese language. A few fragments of it have been translated; but the language being a mongrel between Chinese and another type, the work of translation is difficult and arduous.

—The American Baptist Missionary Union reports: "Whole number of missionaries, including wives and single women, 140; native preachers, ordained and unordained, 958; number of churches connected with the missions of the Union, 786; number of baptisms, so far as reported, for the year 1875, 2,373. Whole number of members connected with churches, 56,224."

—The Protestant Episcopal Church almanac gives the statistics of the denomination for 1874 at 48 dioceses and missionary jurisdictions, with an increase of 13,554 communicants during the year, an increase of 45 clergy, and of 12 churches consecrated, and of 2,621 scholars in the Sunday schools. The contributions of the churches decreased $427,190. Its ministerial candidates decreased 137, and Sunday school teachers 3,783.

WESTERN MEXICO.—Rev. Mr. Watkins has made an outline map of the country near Guadalajara, on which he has designated sixty-eight places, from "ranchos," containing two or three families, to "pueblos," containing several thousand people, which have been visited by members of the church at Guadalajara. In all of these places there are some professed Protestants, in many cases true Christians. In Guadalajara there is a church of one hundred and ten members, of whom ten or twenty male members and five or ten female members act as missionaries. Such statements are very encouraging.

—The Methodist Episcopal Church has in all, in Mexico, some $63,500 worth of property—$42,000 in the city of Mexico, $15,000 at Puebla, and $5,000 at Puchuca. The stations are: Puebla, Orizaba, Millellores, Quanahuata, Quaratero, Padnea and the city of Mexico; 11 preaching places, 8 Spanish preachers, 8 teachers, 4 local preachers, and 7 Americans, three of whom preach in Spanish, and two are ladies; an orphan school of 50 children, and a hand printing press. Last year Dr. Butler received in all some $32,000 for the current appropriation from the Woman's Society for Foreign Missions.

—The young man, an ex-student of the Navadirpa school, in whose heart evidently the Holy Spirit had been working, was a Brahmin of independent means. After corresponding with me for more than a year he presented himself as a candidate for baptism. Before long his friends and relatives found him out, and urged him, with many entreaties and arguments, to give up his intentions. On one occasion his friends brought forward the mexplained mysteries of Christianity as an argument against the truth of the Christian religion. In reply he said: "Christianity appears to me like a huge mango tree laden with fruit. I have seen the tree; it is beautiful. I have tasted the fruit, and it is sweet and comforting. As by the taste of one mango I can judge of the nature of the whole tree, so by the little I know of Christianity, which I have tasted and found sweet and consoling, I know that the whole of Christianity must be equally comforting."—Church Missionary Record.

—The Island of Formosa—so called, on account of its lovely form, by the early Portuguese navigators, whose beautiful names, so different from those given by the rovers of northern Europe, adorn the land of discovery—is one of the richest and most fertile under heaven. Its population may be three million; its area that of the State of New York. China claimed it, very much as that colossal pomposity claimed all the lands of the world, but left it to govern itself. On the west side are several Chinese towns and settlements, with the seat of authority in Taiwan. The east coast barbarous tribes live and roam, rob and murder shipwrecked people, and, as some say, eat them. This is doubtful. It would make a long story to tell how British, German, French and American ships have been wrecked there, and how war ships and diplomatists have in vain tried to get redress at Peking or in Formosa. Japanese occupation with camps, skirmishes, and the establishment of order on the coast, occupied six months of 1874; after which China began, as earnestly as that stagnant empire can, to rule the savages, and paid Japan an indemnity of seven hundred thousand silver dollars. The expedition cost the Mikado's empire five millions, while seven hundred of her sons sleep in their graves at Nagasaki. What the Japanese did was for humanity at large. The Germans and English have recently erected monuments over their dead, which now stand unharmed. Formosa is open to mission labor. Something has already been accomplished. The Scotch Presbyterian missionaries, four in number, who have been laboring on the west coast for eight years, report as the result of their labor several Christian churches, having over one thousand communicants. One of their missions is among the once murderous savages who formerly enjoyed the slaughter of shipwrecked crews. Rev. Mr. Ritchie, one of the little band of four, is now on his way home, to recruit, and, if possible, obtain new supplies of men and means. May not Formosa become as Madagascar, and more so?—Independent.

Our Young People.

BABY-LAND.

"How many miles to Baby-land?"
Any one can tell;
Up one flight,
To your right;
Please to ring the bell."

"What can you see in Baby-land?"
"Little folks in white—
Downy-headed,
Cradle-bedded,
Fresh as pure and bright."

"What do they do in Baby-land?"
"Dream and wake and play,
Laugh and grow,
Shout and crow;
Jolly Honey-bees they."

"What do they say in Baby-land?"
"Why, the oddest things,
Might as well
Try to tell
What a birdie sings."

"Who is the queen of Baby-land?"
"Mother kind and sweet;
And her love,
Born above,
Guides the little feet."

Berthald Reimer.

She was a girl in her fifteenth year perhaps; yet the slight, fragile form and exceeding delicacy of skin made her look almost like a little child.

It was a warm summer day, still she had waited, resting in the shadow of one of the huge pillars which framed the entrance way to that quaint old cathedral; bending forward eagerly as each step sounded on the pavement beyond, and sinking back again, as it died away in the distance, with a look of keen disappointment on her young face. And thus had she sat watching and waiting, hour after hour passing away, till the afternoon had nearly waned, and, weary, she was about to leave, when a sudden sound arrested her. A man's step rang sharp and clear on the marble near, and, passing in the direction of the gallery stairs, slowly ascended.

The girl's whole aspect changed; she bent eagerly forward, her hands clasped tightly, her lips slightly parted. "It is he!" she murmured, the rich color flushing her cheeks and dying away as swift as it had come. Almost as she spoke she was on her feet, groping with extended hands in the direction the stranger had taken.

It was the grand master she was following, and even as she reached the stairs the low, sweet notes of the organ floated to her ears. She opened the gallery door softly and seated herself on one of the seats of the choir.

To Berthald Reimer the exquisite pleasure she derived from hearing the master as he came each day to practice was the one joy of her life. She had learned to know his footstep, and would wait after each cathedral service, that she might but touch him as he passed along, and go home satisfied with the sound of the mighty music she had heard clinging to her and helping her bear her sad young life more bravely; for Berthald was a poor child, and withal she was blind.

The master had often noticed the little figure, and the soft, tender expression of the child's face, and would have spoken; but somehow when he had the opportunity to do so she was always gone, and so the time passed away, and the master played, and she sat and listened, wondering and hoping that the day might come when she could feel his hand and hear the sound of his voice.

Perhaps the master was not so attentive to his duties, or Berthald might not have closed the gallery door so softly that afternoon, but he noticed the child when she entered; and, when he had finished his piece, rose quietly, and, before the girl could leave the choir he was beside her.

"You are not afraid of me, my child?" he asked, gently laying his hand on her soft golden curls.

"Oh! no, sir," she answered eagerly, her whole frame trembling with excitement, "not afraid of you." She paused, uncertain what to say, and lifted her large, sweet eyes to his face.

"What is your name?" he asked again, still keeping his hand upon her head.

"Berthald Reimer, the blind girl," she answered quietly. A look of intense pity passed over his face, and he did not speak for a few moments; then, he said: "Well, Berthald, would you like to hear me play again?" The look of joy which passed over the girl's face, and her eager, "Oh! yes, sir!" were enough. He smiled, and, taking her by the hand, led her to the organ and placed her beside him. For a long time he played; then, suddenly pausing, he asked: "Can you sing?"

"A little," she answered.

He played the prelude to an air sweet and simple, and which was well-known.

"Sing this, Berthald, child," he said. At first the blind girl's voice was low and trembling, but as she sang she forgot before whom she stood, and, all absorbed in the beauty of the song and her love for it, she lost all trace of fear, and, as the last notes sounded, her voice rang out clear, strong and beautiful.

"Well done, child," said the master, "well done, indeed. You shall come to me every day, and I will teach you, and then you shall sing here."

Berthald's sightless eyes filled with tears, and, feeling for the master's hand, she bent her head and kissed it reverently.

From that day she became a pupil of the great organist, and before many years had passed away the wondrous beauty of her voice had spread far and near, and the cathedral was filled with strangers to hear and see the blind girl. Offers of the most tempting nature were made her, but she refused them all; and, clinging to her friend, was never happy save by his side.

It was a rare sight to see her in the choir of the old cathedral of a Sabbath day. In the warmer season always dressed in white, with her hair, almost golden, falling in a rich veil about her; no trace of color upon her pure face; the light from the great oriel window streaming in upon her and bathing her in its softened rays. All gazed upon her—standing there shut out from all that makes life beautiful, singing her wondrous songs—as a being allied to another world.

But Berthald's rare life was not a long one. She had always been a fragile girl, and now, though everything was done which loving hands and hearts could do—for the master brought her to his own home and cared for her as his child—yet she seemed to grow tired, would rest often, and, though her place in the choir was always filled, and her voice rang out sweet and strong as ever, she would place her hand on her side, and her breath grew shorter and quicker. And so nearly a year sped on, and, as the pleasant spring days once more came, Berthald seemed to grow stronger, and her earnest wish to sing in the great Easter festival which was held in the cathedral, and in which she took the most prominent part, was to be gratified. There had been much labor and hard work, for the music to be rendered was entirely new and exceedingly difficult.

At last the time arrived for the concert; everybody was ready, each performer in his place. The vast building was thronged with listeners; every available spot had been secured. The grand master took his place at the organ, and the first low notes of the opening anthem broke upon the ear. Berthald stood, clad in her usual simple dress of white, waiting for her part. The organist ceased, and the blind girl's magic voice was heard upon the stillness; the choruses and organ joined her, and, when the music ceased, thunders of applause followed. The concert had nearly ended, and Berthald's last piece was to be sung. She looked very beautiful as she stood there, and when the exquisite notes sounded from her parted lips not a movement was heard; it seemed as if no one breathed. Then, as the last faint utterance died away, the people broke forth in a tumult of feeling; the stage was literally covered with flowers, and her name was rung forth again and again. She stood, one hand resting on a music-rack, the other holding a simple flower, waiting for the excitement to die away; then she said in her own quiet way: "I thank you, dear friends;" and, taking the master's hand, turned to leave the place, but scarcely had walked two steps when she tottered, and would have fallen, but the master caught her in his arms and carried her fainting away. They took her home, and, watching her carefully, hoped that yet she might live; but it was all in vain—no power on earth could save her.

And the days sped on, till the last one on earth for her had come. It was on the close of a lovely Sabbath, just as the sun was sinking behind the western hills, that Berthald Reimer's blind eyes were opened, and she saw the mighty glories of the other world. She had spoken but little through the afternoon, and now, as the evening drew nigh, she moved her head gently, and, like a little child with its mother, drew the hand of the friend who had been so much to her on earth under her cheek, and fell quietly asleep. When the head grew heavy, and the cheek cold, the master drew his hand away.

Berthald Reimer, the wondrous blind girl, was dead.—Evangelical Churchman.

THE GIRL AND THE SKEPTIC.—There was once a very clever and learned gentleman, but an infidel, who was travelling among the mountains and valleys of Wales. He came to a roadside cottage in a lonely, lovely spot, and, as he was very tired and thirsty, stopped to ask for a drink of water. It was a little girl he spoke to, sitting at the cottage door with a book on her knee. She instantly rose and said: "Will you not have a cup of milk, sir, for you are hot, and the cold water would hurt you?"

He was very much pleased with her kindness, and thought he would like a little chat with her. So when she came out with the milk he said: "I see you are getting your lesson there, my dear."

"No, sir," she answered, "I am only reading."

"Why, what book?"

"The Bible, sir."

"What," said he, half smiling to himself as he gave back the cup, "do you like that book, then?"

For a moment the little maiden did not answer for surprise; then, lifting her bright eyes to his face, she said: "Why, sir, I thought that everybody loved the Bible."

The gentleman bade the child good-by, and slowly rode along. No one knew what he was thinking of then; but years after, when he had become a true and humble Christian, he used to tell of that little Welsh girl, and say: "And I, too, now find I understand what the Bible is, am almost as ready to wonder at my question as she was; for every one who really knows it must surely love it too."

A gentleman visited an unhappy man in jail awaiting his trial. "Sir," said the prisoner, tears running down his cheeks, "I had a good home education; it was my street education that ruined me. I used to slip out of the house and go off with the boys in the street. In the street I learned to lounge; in the street I learned to swear; in the street I learned to smoke; in the street I learned to gamble; in the street I learned to pilfer. Oh, sir, it is in the street the devil lurks to work the ruin of the young!"

Let patience have her perfect work and bring forth her celestial fruits. Trust God to weave in your little thread into the web, though the pattern show it not yet. When God's people are able and willing thus to labor and wait, remember that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day; the grand harvest shall come to its reaping, and the day shall broaden itself into a thousand years, and the thousand years shall show themselves as a perfect and finished day.—George Macdonald.

Meeting of the Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of this paper met at the Seashore camp ground on Saturday, July 22. There were present Rev. J. G. Jones and Rev. Dr. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference, Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, of the Alabama Conference, and Rev. John Mathews, Rev. Christian Keener, and the editor, of the Louisiana Conference. The publisher furnished the committee with detailed statements concerning the business management, and his course was heartily approved. There has been some improvement upon last year, and the outlook is regarded as hopeful. Much money is, however, due from subscribers, and the publisher is put to great inconvenience for want of what is owing him. Will our subscribers and agents make a note of this and remit promptly? During these dull months every dollar is needed to meet the weekly expenditures. The large amount due is in small sums, and our friends will be less embarrassed to raise the money and remit than the publisher will be by failing to receive it promptly. Dr. Wadsworth was appointed to write the usual address of the Publishing Committee for publication.

Apprehended of Christ.

Paul was arrested by Christ in the midst of a career of violence and unbelief. He recognizes the supreme and merciful purpose as to himself when he exclaims: "But I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." The arrest of the sinner ordinarily is not by miraculous means. There are no physical demonstrations, the eye is not struck with blindness, and there is no vision of the supernatural to overwhelm the mind and to overpower the senses. But religious awakening and conviction of sin are the conditions of that manifestation of Christ which is common in human experience. The Lord appears to men on their way to Damascus in this wise, not in visible form, nor in overpowering light, nor with startling voice, but in the shape of serious impressions, and in the sense of guilt and danger, and the urgent need of deliverance from sin.

Paul was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. He surrendered to Christ at once, repented, and experienced the saving power of the gospel. He henceforth disclaimed the righteousness of the law, and builded upon another foundation. Henceforth he counted all things but loss that he might win Christ, "and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." Christ laid hold on him that he might lay hold upon eternal life. He saw the benignant end of that sudden and unexpected blow that fell upon him when he was at the height of his madness, and it became the object of his subsequent life to realize it.

Leaving out what was physically miraculous in his awakening, the mental and spiritual exercises are much like his in all. The convictions of the sinner are connected with Christ as the persecuted, the neglected, the rejected One. His sin has been a conscious refusal to accept Christ as his Lord and Savior; and, when conviction comes, its central point is that he has rejected Christ. The reproving Spirit moves about this axis of truth, and brings out the guilt and condemnation of unbelief in their special relations to the crucified Redeemer. There is a startling realization of Christ as the glorified, who, in his personal exaltation and power, lays his hand upon the rebellious soul. This is distinctive of religious conviction under the gospel: that the sinner is apprehended, arrested, seized by Christ himself; and the alarmed sinner knows that it is Christ who takes hold of him, and calls him to give up his unreasonable enmity and submit to his sway. As in Paul's case, there is no room for evasion, Christ is manifest to the soul, the fact that the sinner is against him personally is made clear, and the issue is sharp whether to submit or to finally reject Christ and his offered salvation. The inward light of the Holy Spirit shines with wonderful brightness, revealing Christ in his awful splendor, and exhibiting the guilty soul in its defiant attitude.

Often there is a suddenness in the conviction of sin which comes to the conscience very much as the light, the voice and the form of Christ came upon the persecuting Pharisee. It is well if the awakened obey the heavenly vision, and yield to the power of the Son of God. But it is not always so. Of those whom Christ apprehends, how few comparatively yield and are saved. Not with the ready obedience of Paul, but rather with the guilty delay of Felix, they dismiss their convictions; and those whom Christ has apprehended, for the purpose of bringing them to heaven, are lost forever.

It is, however, as a reminiscence of the Christian that Paul refers to his awakening as an arrest. There is something wonderful in this experience as the believer looks back upon it. The time, the manner, all the surroundings, to him have something remarkable in them. Christ was strangely revealed to him—suddenly and powerfully while in mid-career of sin. He was stricken down in the dust as in a moment. It might have been bewildering and inexplicable to others, but to him it was the persecuted and despised Christ whose word was sharper than any two-edged sword. The vision was all within, but it was as real and overwhelming as if it had been to the outward senses. It was a crisis—the very turning-point in the soul's destiny. From that struggle issued penitence and faith, and the life of peace and love. What a mercy—what a depth of mercy—that the arresting hand was laid upon him then—at all—but then! Later might have been too late. And there may be the recollection of halting purpose, and the thought of delay, and that the powers of darkness had nearly triumphed. But things turned the other way, there was a complete surrender to the Savior, and heaven upon earth followed. It makes us tremble to think of dangers encountered, hair-breadth escapes, of imminent perils barely missed. How nearly lost is the soul that, after long and sharp resistance, does at length submit to Christ! How nearly lost, and yet how completely saved!

And the devout mind goes back to that fearful and gracious hour to reenforce its ardor and patience in the heavenly race. "That I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." It is the key-note of the whole song. The end was in the beginning. Arrested in his madness and blindness by a compassionate Savior, the converted soul gathers strength and hope from such grace abounding. And just as in conviction his feet had well-nigh slipped, so he sees danger still before him. He was apprehended in his sins that he might be saved; he must now make this object his earnest pursuit. He must seize that for which he was seized, he must grasp and secure that for which the arm of mercy was first stretched out in his behalf. He must now be studious to attain all that Christ arrested him for—the heights of holiness here, the utmost measure of usefulness, the last degree of consecration, and the heavenly crown.

It is thus that we may go back to this most striking epoch in our religious history and find in it a lesson of hope, of vigilance, and of more determined effort in the service of Christ. The mercy therein exhibited is enough to fire the heart with a life-long zeal, and to keep the flame of love always burning. For, after all, if the arrested sinner may shake off serious conviction, and refuse the boon of pardon, so may they who have experienced the regenerating power come short of the glorious and final reward.

Many things that we call differences in kind, prove in God's scale to be only differences in degree.

Death of Mrs. S. B. Thomas.

On Wednesday, July 26, at half-past eight o'clock P. M., Sister Thomas, in company with Rev. B. B. Ross, took the train at Biloxi, Miss., for Auburn, Ala. In the attempt to pass from one car into another, just as the train was under way, she fell between the platforms, and was instantly killed by the wheels passing over her. She had been spending some time at Biloxi, and was at the camp meeting nearly every day during its continuance, apparently in excellent health, and enjoying the occasion exceedingly. On the Sunday morning before her death we saw her at the experience meeting, where she "professed a good profession before many witnesses." We believe she was also on the camp ground on Wednesday, the day of her death.

Sister Thomas was a native of Massachusetts, but for nearly fifty years her home has been in the South. She was, we suppose, not less than eighty-five years old at the time of her death, but was active in body and mind, and exempt from most of the infirmities of age. She was one of the most gifted women of our country, a pioneer in the cause of female education, ardent and enthusiastic in her devotion to Christ and his cause, and a writer of great sprightliness, grace and beauty. While her mind was of masculine strength and vigor, it had also every charm of womanly delicacy and sweetness. As a writer, educator and devoted Christian, she was widely known and esteemed throughout the land. In the church she was always ready for every good word and work, but her sympathies of late years were specially enlisted for our mission in China. To this she made annual and generous contributions, and for it her prayers ascended. On the organization of the new church on St. Charles street, under Rev. Dr. Munsey, she transferred her membership to that charge, and took a lively interest in its welfare.

But we must not be betrayed into a sketch of her life and character, as this will doubtless be furnished by another hand. The manner of her death was a shock to our whole community, and an aggravation of what, under any circumstances, would have been a severe affliction to her kindred and friends. After so long a life of Christian experience and usefulness, it would seem to have been most fitting and meet that she should have quietly fallen asleep amidst the gentle ministries of those who loved her so tenderly and well. But it was otherwise, and we must bow in submissive sorrow to the event. Her nephew, Judge E. T. Merrick, and other kindred and friends, deposited her remains temporarily in the cemetery near Biloxi, to be finally buried, according to her oft-expressed wish, in Withraham, Mass. Bishop Keener and Dr. Munsey conducted the burial services.

Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: The seventeenth scholastic year of the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., closed on Wednesday, July 5.

The members of the preparatory school contested in declamation for prizes on Thursday evening, June 29; and the undergraduates on Friday evening, the thirtieth.

The commencement sermon was preached on Sunday, by Rev. E. P. Birch, of the Alabama Conference.

The Belles-Lettres Society's exhibition occurred on Monday evening, July 3. Addresses were delivered by N. J. Vick, of Mississippi, F. A. Bizzell, of Alabama, J. F. Billiro, of Alabama, and W. L. Fletcher, of Arkansas.

The Clariosophic Society's exhibition occurred the next evening. Addresses were delivered by J. R. Branham, Jr., of Georgia, W. M. Cox, of Alatama, Webb Wood, of Alabama, and J. L. Skinner, of Alabama.

On Wednesday Col. John W. A. Sanford, of Montgomery, delivered the address before the two societies; and Mr. Darby M. Callaway, of Selma, read before the Alumni Society the biography of "William Mitten."

Mr. —— Holleman, of Mississippi, A. H. Moore, of Perry county, Ala., and Arthur W. Smith, of Prattville, Ala., delivered addresses, and graduated with the degree of master of arts. Mr. J. L. Skinner and Rev. C. H. Kelly, of the Alabama Conference, graduated with the degree of bachelor of philosophy.

Rev. Luther M. Smith, D. D., president, delivered the address to the graduates.

The university will begin its next session early in October next. Dr. Smith, Prof. Josiah Lewis, Jr., and Prof. J. S. Hopkins will retain their places in the faculty, and other members will be added to the faculty.

The writer has not thought it proper to use adjectives in speaking of the exercises mentioned, but he will say that it is his intention to return his son to the Southern University next session, for two reasons: First, he is satisfied with the mental and moral culture his son received there the past session; second, he feels it to be his duty to sustain the university, because it is a Methodist institution, that was founded by the Alabama Conference, and that has sent into the itinerant ranks some young men of promise, and that has educated many sons of itinerant preachers.

Ought not the Methodist preachers and laymen of the Alabama Conference to labor to send one hundred and fifty students to the university next session? It seems so to me.

A LAYMAN.

Our Cuban Mission.

The Southern Christian Advocate publishes an interesting report from Rev. Charles A. Fulwood, superintendent of the mission. We extract as follows:

I am more than ever impressed with the importance of this as a mission post. Four years ago I urged its establishment, but unfortunately it was delayed until January, 1874. During the latter part of last year there was a great religious awakening among the Cubans, and fifty-two were brought into the church. Some were happily converted then, some have been converted since, some are still seeking to know Christ as a personal Savior, two have died in the faith of Jesus, six have removed, and alas! a few have been vacillating, and are drawn away by the Ritualists.

Being convinced that a mission school was necessary to the success of our missionary labors, I took initial steps looking to the opening of a small school in the early part of the current year. At Conference Bishop Wightman, and the presiding elder, Rev. A. A. Robinson, gave their hearty approval to the steps that had been taken, the only question being "as to the practicability of keeping up a mission school upon an almost nominal appropriation."

The Bishop made us an official visit in February, and was present at the inauguration of our little mission school on the twenty-second of the month. His coming was most timely. He was abundant in labors, preaching morning and evening on Sunday, and speaking to the children in the afternoon. His presence, labors and episcopal influence among us mark an era in the history of Methodism on the island.

The school is held in a comfortable room, capable of accommodating about fifty scholars. The location is excellent. For this room a rental of $15 per month is paid out of the proceeds of the school. Neat and durable school furniture has been purchased, and paid for out of the missionary appropriation for the current year, and is held as the property of the Missionary Society. The school opened with five scholars; it now has thirty. Sister Annis B. Lyfroun, principal, and Bro. Silvera y Cordova, assistant, are working with pious fidelity, and with no small measure of self-sacrifice, to make the school efficient and useful. We have purchased for the use of the school a small Mason and Hamlin organ, at a cost of $75. It is to be paid for in monthly installments of $6 until the debt is liquidated. Some may think this an unnecessary expenditure. Without, however, discussing the matter, I will simply say that in a community where all the schools, public and private, Protestant and Roman Catholic, are supplied with instruments of music, to build up a respectable school without the aid of instrumental music would be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible. Will not some Sunday school send us a special missionary contribution to aid us in paying for this instrument?

Since the death of Bro. Ferdinand Diez, on the third of last December, Bro. Henry B. Somellan has been employed in the Cuban mission. He was licensed to exhort in February. He is studious, diligent, pious, and is anxious to prepare himself for the great life-work to which he feels himself called. He will probably be licensed to preach at our next Quarterly Conference, and contemplates applying for admission into the Florida Conference at its next session. We have a sermon in Spanish once a week. This service is not largely attended, but it is profitable. Eight Cubans have recently united with the church, and there are unmistakable indications of increasing religious interest among them.

We have a Cuban department in our Sunday school, under the immediate supervision of Bro. Somellan. In this department there are thirty-five children and two teachers, and there is a gradual and steady increase in the attendance. Through this means a great work is being achieved, but we are straitened for room. The church building is too small. The mission needs a separate church building for worship, and for Sunday school purposes. When and how can this need be supplied? When I contemplate the embarrassments under which we labor, the difficulties with which we grapple, the studied and persistent efforts of Romanists and Ritualists to circumvent our humble endeavors to enlighten and save the Cubans, I can scarcely understand why it is that we "hold on our way without faltering." Surely God is with us! He hath given us some tangible results. Some precious grain has been garnered in heaven, and other remains, it may be, to render "white unto the harvest" this and many a distant field in the regions beyond.

We are here on an island midway between Cape Sable and Cuba. We rarely see a preacher of any denomination, except the few who labor in churches here. We cannot have the companionship of our brethren, but we claim their sympathy and prayers.

Letter from Japan.

YOKOHAMA, JAPAN, June 6, 1876.

REV. D. C. KELLEY, D. D.—My Dear Brother: You will see by my address that I am in Japan. I arrived here last Thursday, the first of this month, and expect to return on my way to Shanghai to-morrow, the seventh. Before leaving Shanghai, on the twenty-fourth of May, I had been improving each day, and was advised by our physician and others to come to Japan for a few weeks. Taking advantage of the exceeding low prices from Shanghai to Yokohama, I left home on the twenty-fourth of May, and reached this place on the first of June, and have been kindly entertained by our kind friends, Dr. Maclay and his excellent wife and family, and also by other members of the mission at this place and in the great city of Tokio. At first I felt some regret at leaving Shanghai for any length of time; but since reaching this place, and seeing something of the workings of the Spirit of God upon the hearts of these people, who seem ready with something more than willing hearts to receive the glad news of salvation through Christ, I have been glad indeed that the Lord has directed my steps here to witness these wonderful movements; and now I return to China with a heart full of thankfulness to God, and with a more earnest desire to press on in the good work of grace which has been commenced there. For three days I have been attending the quarterly meeting of our Methodist brethren here, and my heart has been filled with joy at what I have witnessed. They have now in Yokohama twenty-one communicants, and seven in Tokio, and a number on probation. Their prayer-meetings and love-feasts have been characterized by devotion and earnestness, and I have been surprised to see how punctual they have been in attending the services. North and south, all over the empire of Japan, they are embracing Christianity as soon as they understand fully the message of salvation through Christ. At Nagasaki the Rev. Mr. Davison, of the Methodist mission, told me there was a wonderful work of grace going on about forty miles from that city in the school taught by Capt. Jayne. No missionary has had anything to do with this work. Capt. Jayne had been sent for from America to teach the Japanese the art of war. When he arrived in Japan there was nothing for him to do in the army, and he determined to teach school. The result of this teaching has been that about forty young men have professed themselves soldiers of the cross of Christ. One young man has gone to Yeddo, entered the college there, and has been baptized. It is hoped others will come to Nagasaki and unite with the church. In this school there was a young man whose father was wealthy and a man of influence. He laughed to scorn the faith of the Christian, and advised his son to have nothing to do with those who professed faith in Christ. The son, partaking of the spirit of his father, withdrew from the school, and commenced violent opposition. This continued for some time. The father, observing the forbearance and meekness of those who professed faith in Christ, and the overbearing, haughty disposition of their persecutors, said to his son: "There must be some reality, some power in Christianity, with which they were not acquainted, and he had better return to school and examine into it." He did so, and both his father and himself are warm advocates of Christianity. They have prayer meetings among themselves, and great good is expected to result from the truth thus sown in their hearts.

At Kobe, in the inland sea, I met a custom-house officer, who was on duty on board of our steamer. Seeing a Japanese book near him I took it up, and on reading the Chinese part of it I found it was a Christian book. I commenced a conversation with him in English and found he was a Christian, and said he attended Sabbath school in Kobe. I asked him if his father knew he was a Christian. He replied: "Yes, my father also is a Christian, and all the family." I told him I was so glad to know he was a Christian. He said: "I like Christianity very much. Christian people are all good people, and I hope all the Japanese will soon become Christians." Dr. Berry told me the number taken into the church at Kobe this year and during the past winter was fifty-four, and about the same number in Osaka and Kiota. They have thirty-two missionaries, including the ladies, in Japan, and their board had written that they would send all the men they could spare. Japan is destined to be a second Madagascar before many years. Why cannot our church come forward and help in the evangelization of these people? In many parts of the country they are imbibing false principles from ungodly men. German infidelity and skepticism is entering into the country, and, like a flood, will overspread the country unless Christian people come forward, and with a holy zeal for the cause of God defend the faith of the religion they profess. Now is the time when action should be taken. The people are in a transitory state, and ready everywhere to accept of Christianity when presented to them. Instead of the fifty missionaries in Japan there should be one thousand scattered all over the country. There are not Christian men and women sufficient to occupy all the places which are being opened by a wise Providence, and unless Christian men come and accept of these openings they will be filled by ungodly men. All Christian missionaries with whom I have conversed wished me to urge our board to send men at once to this field and establish a mission here in some part of Japan. I trust they will not delay taking action in reference to this field. We trust in time Japan will send missionaries to China. I think there is no doubt about this. I am sorry our church has not before this established a mission in Japan among this interesting people. I hope it will be soon, that we, too, may take part in giving Christianity to this people. I feel sure that in six months I could speak this language, and be able to work among them. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain yours in the bonds of Christian fellowship,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

FRENCH METHODIST CONFERENCE.—The twenty-third session of the French Methodist Conference opened in Andizer, south of France, June [illegible] Pastor Cornfarth, who was elected last year and had been confirmed by the British Conference, presided. Rev. J. P. Cook officiated as secretary; and Rev. Mr. Pulsford, president.

Two young men were received as candidates to begin their probation. They are both ministers' sons. One of them is a B. D. of the Lausanne Academy, a young man of considerable talent and devotedness. The three young ministers who are on trial were also forwarded one year, the reports of their respective districts meetings being favorable. Another young man, from the Channel Islands, was also received as an evangelist or salaried local preacher.

A letter was also read from the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Switzerland. Rev. [illegible] Dugand was appointed to prepare an answer to it, and as our brethren will meet next month in their Annual Conference at Zurich (Switzerland) the president was requested to [illegible] them from Lausanne as a representative.

To answer to the question: "Why ministers have died?" it was answered that none had been called away since the decease of the lamented Emile Cook, two and a half years ago.

At a Conference love-feast, held on the second morning, nineteen brethren successively narrated their Christian experience of the past year. The goodly number testified in favor of the blessed possession of perfect love, and the meeting, which lasted nearly three hours, was a most blessed one.—New York Christian Advocate.

DEATH OF MRS. T. W. DYER.—Very sorrowful to us is the tidings contained in the following note. Sister Dyer was young, accomplished, beautiful, and a devoted Christian. Last winter, while at Greenville attending the Alabama Conference, we enjoyed the hospitalities of her well-ordered home.

To our dear friend and brother we tender our sympathies and prayers, and also to the bereaved mother. May the gracious Father in heaven sustain them in this great sorrow.

MARION, ALA., July 27, 1876.

Bro. Parker: Sister Dyer, wife of Rev. T. W. Dyer, of Greenville, Ala., died at their home yesterday evening at six o'clock. Her corpse was brought to this place and buried in the family burying-place this evening.

Bro. Dyer has the sympathy and prayers of this community in this hour of his deep affliction.

Yours, etc., J. E. FAUST.

The Seashore camp meeting opened with a prayer meeting on Thursday morning, July 27. As nearly as we have been able to ascertain there were one hundred and thirty conversions. The meeting was also a great blessing to the Christian people—a time of reviving and refreshing power. Quite a number of families are still on the ground, and will remain there for several weeks. There are few more agreeable resorts for a short summer vacation, and there are the religious advantages of Sunday preaching and prayer meetings.

In another column will be found a communication concerning the Southern University. Certainly the friends of the college ought to be able to secure one hundred and fifty students for the opening in October next. By the way, we were much gratified to make the acquaintance of Prof. Hopkins at the Seashore camp meeting, and to hear from him a very able and edifying sermon.

Los Angeles Conference.

CHANGE OF TIME.

The session of the Los Angeles Conference, which is announced for October 25, will meet on Friday, October 20. It is important that I should sail for China by the packet of November 1, and in order to do this I find it necessary to make the above change. E. M. MARVIN.

ST. LOUIS, July 24, 1876.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL COUNCIL.—At the Reformed Episcopal Council held in Ottawa, on Saturday last, Rev. Samuel Fallows, D. D., late of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was elected missionary bishop. He accepted the position with thanks. Bishop Cheney expressed his satisfaction at the appointment. It was decided that the next meeting of the council should take place at Philadelphia.

On Sunday evening Dean Cridge, of British Columbia, was consecrated the bishop of the Pacific coast, and Dr. Fallows, of Chicago, missionary bishop.

The name of the Ladies' Repository is to be changed, on the first of January next, to "The National Repository." It is to be made a first-class literary and religious magazine.

The honorary degree of D. D. was worthily bestowed upon the Rev. [illegible] W. Miller, of the Kentucky Conference, and the Rev. J. B. Robbins, editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate.

Resignation is putting God between one's self and one's grief.—Madam Swetchine.

Books and Periodicals.

We have received the fifth volume of Bancroft's History of the United States, centenary edition, now being issued by Little, Brown & Co., Boston. This volume embraces that period of the Revolution between June, 1775, and September, 1776. One more volume, we believe, completes the work. It will be a very handsome and comparatively cheap edition of this very superior history. For sale by R. J. Harp, depositary, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Appleton's Journal for August has: A Talk About Apples, Four Great Song Composers, Parisian Newspaper Men, Poetical Zoology, Living and Dead Cities of Zuyder Zee, Mountaineering in Colorado, Life of London, and other articles.

Ware's Valley Monthly for August has: Entomology, From Wakarusa to Appomattox, On the Many Advantages of Being Fat, Platonic Love, The State and Prison Education, Rambles and Rambles Abroad, Arkansas Hot Springs, and other articles.

The Atlantic Monthly for August has: The Arthurian, Jerusalem, The Division of School Funds for Religious Purposes, Dickens and the Pickwick Papers, Characteristics, The International, and other articles.

The Chinese Problem is the title of a small 12mo, paper cover, by L. Townsend, D. D. Lee & Shepard, Boston, publishers. Mr. Townsend contends strongly for the right of the Chinese to enjoy our land of liberty.

Lippincott's Magazine for August has: Montenegro, illustrated; The Age of Knick-knacks; Raising the Siege at Chattanooga; Letters from South Africa, and other articles.

Scribner's Monthly for August comes out as a mid-summer holliday number, and is splendidly illustrated.

St. Nicholas for August is also a holiday number, and will afford the young folks a rare treat in the way of entertaining and amusement.

The Sanitarian for August has been received.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.—In our advertising columns our readers will find the following, not hitherto noticed:

Centenary College, Jackson, La.—Dr. Andrews, a model for character and an able educator, is President. The Institution is the property of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, is healthfully located, admirably conducted.

Randolph Macon College.—One of the oldest and best, located at Ashland, Va.

Georgian Female College, Macon.—Rev. W. C. Bass, D. D., president. This is one of the largest and most prosperous female colleges in the land. It is under the control and patronage of the Georgia Conference.

MARRIED.

JORDAN.—At the residence of the bride's father, in Natchitoches parish, La., July 11, by Rev. J. M. Franklin, Mr. S. E. Ross to Miss Annie Jordan.

Publisher's Department.

E. F. Ross, Esq., connected several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

THE THEORY OF MUSIC, by H. R. Palmer, published by those enterprising publishers, John Church & Co., of Cincinnati, is now out. No copy of this book has reached us, yet from the character of the publishers and their thorough knowledge of what is needed in the trade we doubt not that it will meet a ready sale and be found to supply a link necessary to complete the chain of musical literature. See advertisement in another column.

THE MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The commencement of the above-named institution occurs at 329 West Seventh street, Cincinnati, will be found among our new advertisements. The faculty is composed of men possessing high reputations with the profession and with the community. For circulars address W. H. Taylor, M. D.

STEAM ENGINES AND MACHINERY.—In our new advertising columns will be found the card of Messrs. L. & E. Greenwald, among the oldest and most reliable machinery manufacturing houses in the West. Having been established about thirty years ago, their increased business is the result of enterprise and confidence.

SONGS OF GLORY.—The above-named excellent book has reached a sale of fifty thousand. By referring to the advertisement in another column the new system of notation will be found explained. It is commended for its convenience and usefulness to all learners. Published by Fillmore Bros., Cincinnati.

THE GIBSON FEMALE ACADEMY.—See our new advertisements will be found the card of the above substantial and well-conducted institution. Dr. Jones and his excellent wife are devoted to the work, and young ladies could not be in better hands.

THE CRAWFORD HOUSE.—Travelers to and from Cincinnati should observe the advertisement and call representing the Crawford House; the proprietorship of Frank J. Oakes, Esq., a gentleman of fine reputation as a hotel-manager.

OUR FRIEND, Mr. Philip Werlein, at Nos. 78, 80 and 82 Canal street, of this city, offers one hundred Knabe, Dunham, Hyde and Hardman pianos, one hundred Estey & Co. and Mason & Hamlin organs at the lowest prices that instruments have been sold at since the war. Mr. Werlein will give planters, and others, who prefer it, time for large payments, the convenience and satisfaction of every person. Mr. Philip Werlein has long been recognized as one of the leading music dealers of the South, and from our personal knowledge we recommend his house. Mr. Werlein also does business upon the system of shipping pianos and organs, to persons ordering, on the condition that if they are not satisfactory in every particular they can be returned at his expense, and he will pay the freight both ways. In buying a piano or organ it is good policy of a house which, thinks to make a profit to send out any article not good and durable.

GENERAL ENGRAVING, BOOK-BINDERS' TOOL CUTTING, Etc.—Otto Zell, northwest corner of Fourth and Main streets, Cincinnati, Ohio, keeps hand stamps, gilding rolls and hand pallets constantly on hand. He refers to the following persons and firms, viz: Robert Clarke & Co., stationers and binders; W. E. Dibble, publisher; Western Tract Society Publishing House; Western Methodist Book Concern, Cincinnati, Ohio; Robison, Savage & Co., printers and binders; Publishing House of the Evangelical Association, Cleveland, Ohio.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.—Mr. Charles M. Evans, whose advertisement appears in another column, guarantees satisfaction to those who need artificial limbs, and pronounces to sell cheaper than any other manufacturer in the United States. See advertisement.

NEW TURNIP SEED.—See among our new advertisements that of E. F. Virgin, the well known seedsman, at 98 Gravier street. He has fresh turnip seed.

ONE of the most attractive of the Canal street stores is Navra & Offner's China and glassware establishment.

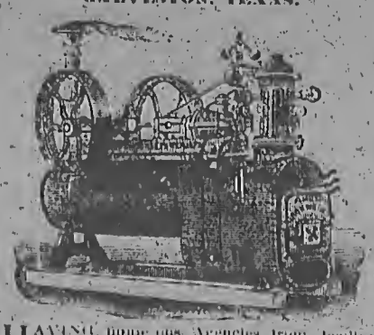
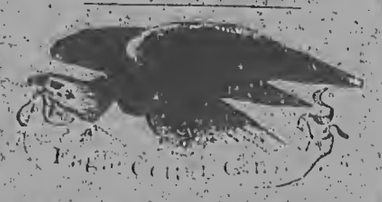
GALVESTON, TEXAS.



HAVING HOME AND AGENCIES from leading manufacturers of the North and West, and doing all our business exclusively on commission, purchasers will always obtain the benefit of competition in prices made by the houses we represent, and all Machinery will be sold at manufacturers' prices.

The largest stock and variety of Machinery in the Cotton States is kept on sale at our warehouses and shops in New Orleans. Stedman & Fuller's Steam Engines, Boilers, Saw Mills, Cotton Presses, Newell Cotton Screws, Prahling Machines, Shaftings, Hangers, Couplings, Pulleys, Steam Pumps and Machinery of all kinds.

Victor Sugar Mills, Cook's Evaporators, Louisville Sugar Mills, Strahl's Queen of the South Corn Mills, Agnew Portable Engines, Watertown Stationary and Portable Engines and Saw Mills, Sugar Kettles, Knowles Steam Pumps, Eagle Cotton Gins, Newell Cotton Screws, Brooks' Cotton Presses, Ingersoll Cotton Presses, Planters' Cotton Presses, Hartz Cotton Presses, Hay Presses, Saws of all kinds, Gas Pipe, Wood-Working Machinery, Belting, Shingle Machines, Steam Gauges, Mowers and Reapers and PLANTATION and SAW MILL MACHINERY OF ALL KINDS at lowest cash prices. Send for descriptive circulars.



Eagle Cotton Gin.

Improved Eagle Cotton Gins.

PRICES REDUCED.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established fact; the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best-built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse-power. All the intelligent planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will testify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gin. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had again returned or rejected and of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only ten-inch cylinders, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in large sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

The bale of cotton which received the grand prize at St. Louis and has won so many thousands of dollars at numerous fairs, was ginned on the Eagle Cotton Gin.

Prices Have Been Greatly Reduced.

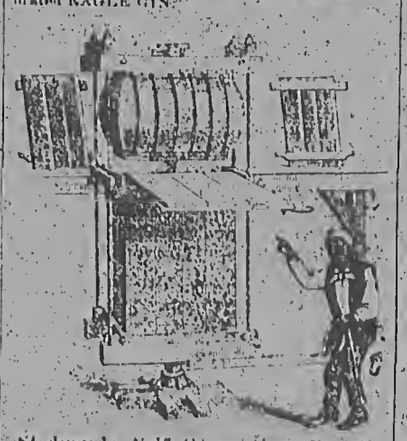
All orders should be addressed to

W. L. CUSHING,
No. 61 St. Charles St., New Orleans.

30 CENTS A POUND FOR COTTON.—The New Orleans Cotton Exchange recently paid 30 CENTS A POUND for a bale of cotton ginned on the EAGLE COTTON GINS, and sent the cotton to the Centennial Exhibition as the best bale of cotton ever seen in New Orleans.

$600 PRIZE AT ST. LOUIS.—At the great St. Louis Fair, last October, the grand prize of $60 for the best bale of cotton was awarded to a bale ginned on an EAGLE COTTON GIN, being from an EAGLE GIN sold by W. L. CUSHING to MONTGOMERY & SONS.

CENTENNIAL PREMIUM.—The Awarding Committee of the great Philadelphia Exposition have given the first award for the best bale of cotton ten bale ginned on the celebrated EAGLE GIN.



Stedman's Self-Supporting Newell Screw Press.

This is the best Press ever invented. It is self-supporting, requires no frame work. Is made under Hall's Patent. Has either a four and one-half or six inch diameter screw. Is in fact a Portable Newell Screw Press. Will press double the quantity of any other Press, and is sold at very low prices.

manufactured by the Illyniver Manufacturing Company, who are successors to the celebrated Niles Works. Over 17,000 of these Mills have been sold. An assortment of all sizes for the smallest planter, and also for large plantations.

RICE THRESHERS.—The SHAKER THRESHER, for Rice, received the first premium at the last Fair. It is the cheapest and best Thresher for Rice ever used, and proved satisfactory to all purchasers. The Rice threshed on the Shaker also took the first premium.

A FEW PORTABLE ENGINES, $100 IN USE.—From the unlimited satisfaction our Engines have given we feel gratified that we have accomplished our aim—to give the best, strongest and most perfect Engine in the American market.

We have received and are constantly receiving the most flattering testimonials of their utility as regards their power, simplicity, and of the general good workmanship in their construction, and we here challenge other manufacturers to build an Engine superior to our own.

All Engines made on separate bed-plate, as they can be used as Stationary Engines.

Send for circulars to W. L. CUSHING, New Orleans, or W. L. CUSHING & MOORE, at Galveston, Texas.

MEDICAL.

IF YOU FEEL DULL, DROWSY, DEBILITATED, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine.

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, dated, March 8, 1875: "I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies." 5plc

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected. If you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden, and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand at almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. No drastic, violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

SHOULD not be regarded as a trifling ailment; in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way to disease. Simmons' Liver Regulator is as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels, as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affection occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

Ask the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine.

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, dated, March 8, 1875: "I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies." 5plc

Snake-Bite Cured.

MR. EDITOR: On the twenty-ninth of June, about five o'clock in the afternoon, I had the best mule I owned bitten on the hind foot, between the hoof and joint, by a rattlesnake. The mule must have trod on the snake, as the man (a negro) did not see the snake until after the mule was bitten. The negro was plowing—laying off corn rows in a new ground, in creek bottom land. As the mule stepped over a log, where the grass and bushes were a foot or two high, the plowman noticed that the mule raised up and held up her foot, which was bleeding very profusely. He looked around and saw the largest rattlesnake crawling off, he says, he ever saw. The negro says that while he was looking for a pole to kill the snake it made its escape. The mule reached me in about thirty minutes, at which time it was very sick. It lay down. Its leg had commenced swelling. I drenched her with one ounce of spirits of heart's-horn and three ounces of alcohol, mixed with a pint of warm water; rubbed her whole leg with kerosene oil well; immediately. If I had had more heart's-horn and alcohol I would have given her twice as much, but this was all I had. In three hours the mule's body was swollen very much; groaning loud, and would not eat at all. The next morning the bitten foot and leg was twice as large as the other, or larger. I had her leg rubbed again with the kerosene oil. The third day I had old field mullen pulled up and chopped up, roots and tops, with Jamestown weed, and boiled together until the decoction was very strong. With this mixture I had her hip, leg and foot well bathed while it was as hot as the mule could bear it. Still the leg was badly swollen, the mule eating heartily. On the fourth day I had another decoction made by boiling the bark of the root of prickly ash. With this she was again well bathed, the swelling now going down. On the fifth day (Sunday) she was as lively and sprightly as she ever was—running about the pasture, kicking up her heels like a colt, with the other mules and horses. On the sixth day (Monday) she was put to the plow again, all the swelling having disappeared. No one can tell that the mule was ever bitten. Is not this a remarkable cure? I have seen horses that were bitten by snakes, whose legs always afterward remained twice as large as they were originally.

Yours fraternally,

WM. N. RAINES.

Hickory, Miss., July 10, 1876.

COTSWOLDS AND SOUTHDOWNS.—I have tried crossing these breeds of sheep, and, thinking some of the readers of the Journal might like to know what result would attend such an experiment, I will give them the benefit of my experience. I had for some time been keeping a thoroughbred Southdown ram with some high grade ewes, hence their lambs were almost full-blooded stock. Not wishing to breed from the same ram any longer, and having a good opportunity to purchase a fine Cotswold, I concluded to try crossing him with the Southdown ewes. The lambs produced by this cross are quite large, grow rapidly, and have very long wool. The last fact makes them appear larger than they really are, but they are very fine lambs. Whether such a cross is better than either of the breeds, I think, must depend upon the use for which they are kept. If wool is the main object, and long wools will sell rapidly, Cotswolds would probably be better than grades. But if early lambs were desired, the Southdowns would mature earlier and probably sell for more money than the grades. And unless very large, heavy sheep are desired, the Southdowns are rather the best for mutton. But for size and weight thoroughbred Cotswolds are superior. The cross produces good-sized, hardy, long-wooled sheep, but for my purpose I would rather have either breed than their grades. With Southdowns I could have lambs which would mature very early; with Cotswolds the lambs would be very large and late; while the cross produces "betweens," which are very good, but do not sell as readily as if they were ready for market earlier, or were late and very large.—L., in Live Stock Journal.

The New England Farmer says: "On the fourth ultimo Hon. Samuel P. Cooper, of Croydon, N. H., slaughtered a hog of the White Chester breed that dressed 1,331 pounds. The creature was three years and eight months old, and had no extra feed until the last eight months. Two years ago he killed one that dressed 1,077 pounds."

TO CLEAN OIL CLOTHS.—Add to a pint of water enough flour to make it about as thick as paste. Rub this over your oil cloth, then rinse off with warm water. It does not take out the color, but brightens the oil cloth.

We are always clever with those who imagine we think as they do. To be shallow you must differ with people; to be profound you must agree with them.

"Matches are made in heaven," and that," says Paddy, "accounts for the tinder passion."

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtues and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Throat is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to enter at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Lungs, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all pulmonary disorders, such as Rheumatism, Liver Complaint or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, especially in those cases of Cholerine which, if not taken in time or proper care, so often degenerate into the more dangerous form of Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most effectual in relieving and preventing that most awful scourge of mankind, and is deservedly resorted to,

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure in the above truly extraordinary medicine has, over sixty thousand pounds of the same mixture (the depôt of which is in this city) been sold, that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children. It requires no particular diet. It is as safe as it is the best, not only because the bottle contains more than any other, but owing to its peculiar combination this Syrup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families where seldom used by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Syrup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted with water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night can take two tablespoonfuls of the Syrup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

A. CARROUCHE,
Agent for New Orleans, 30 Charles street.

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER!

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turner's Dime Tint

HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the indorsement of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind.

No washing or preparation of the hair is necessary before using.

It is free from all Deleterious Ingredients, such as Lead, Sulphur, or other compounds which are poisonous to the Hair or Poisonous by Absorption.

And its use saves both time and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb, once a month or oftener, to the Hair or Whiskers, answers the purpose. The natural color being so perfectly assumed as to defy detection. Its great recommendation is the gradual tint, producing any desired shade, from light brown to the deepest black and beautiful, the absence of that dry and burned appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery, when applied to a single hair, or spots that have become bald, can be restored to their original shade without applying all over the head, as is necessary when using other Hair Dyes.

BALANCED SCREW
COTTON PRESS.
THIS is the most valuable improvement, ever made upon the Screw Cotton Press. It retains all their good qualities, and adds thereto capability and easy operation.
The compression commences on entering the nut in the frame. The nut is operated and closed upon the screw by means of a lever. With the nut open, the screw and follower are both run upon the cotton, then the nut is closed and the pressing is done in the usual manner. One can open the box, and raise up the screw and follower instead of screwing it up. This opening and lowering the screw, by means of the counterbalance, saves revolving the press at least SIXTY times, reducing the time and labor in packing cotton one half.
This Press has taken the premium over all competitors at the five State Fairs of Mississippi and Louisiana.

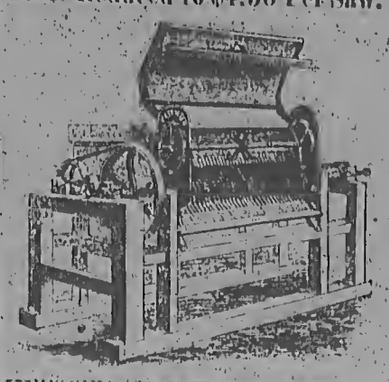
MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It abolishes all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the Same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time; while consuming steam or animal power little more than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple; with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every ten bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Tuesday, August 1, 1876.

MONETARY.

Lenders are ready to loan on good security at fair rates of interest; hence all first class paper is placed without difficulty. Confidence continues to increase, particularly as several tourists have discovered that our neighbors are as bad off, and in some cities worse off than ourselves. The only wise course is to take courage, press forward to the goal of independence with renewed energy, and the future of our Southern emporium shall eclipse our most sanguine hopes. Below we give the statement showing the condition of the banks up to last Friday:

GENERAL MARKET.

The general market manifests but little change. As is usual, sales fall off toward the last of the month, which is the cause of the complaint of dullness. Country merchants, planters and farmers are buying close, which is commendable, and will prove the better for all classes in the end. Stocks of dry goods, boots and shoes, saddlery, hardware and machinery are ample, while breadstuffs, provisions, grain, etc., are light.

Special Notices.

THE SCHOOL FOR BOYS.—Rev. F. M. Grace, A. M., once a professor in the East Tennessee University, and afterward president of Hiwassee College, puts into his paper, the Iron Age, Birmingham, the following notice:

"Hiwassee College closed its annual exercises May 25. We learn from the biennial catalogue that the number of students was one hundred and eighty-six, many of them from Alabama and other gulf States. There is no better school in the world for a boy than Hiwassee. Address President John H. Brunner, Hiwassee College, East Tennessee."

Celebrated Gold Pens

AND PENCILS.

THE FINEST AND BEST.

CONSTANT Testimonials from those engaged in mercantile pursuits, any invention that will facilitate their labor is highly worthy of notice, as well as of extensive patronage. One of the most important inventions of the present age is that of a pen that possesses the necessary qualities of firmness in stock and durability in use. Pre-eminently such are those of JOHN FOLEY, manufacturer of Fine GOLD PENS AND PENCILS, No. 2 Astor House. Their superior value is tested by the long time he has been engaged in our city in their manufacture. We, the subscribers, who know the value of FOLEY'S PENS from constant use of them for a number of years, cheerfully recommend them to those who wish for the best and most perfect Gold Pen ever made.

"THEY SAY."

A WORD TO TALE-BEARERS.

They say! Ah! well, suppose they do,
But can they prove the story true?
Suspicions may arise from naught
But malice, envy, want of thought;
Why count yourself among the "they,"
Who whisper what they dare not say?

They say! But why the tale rehearse,
And help to make the matter worse?
No good can possibly accrue
From telling what may be untrue;
And is it not a nobler plan
To speak of all the best you can?

They say! Well, if it should be so,
Why need you tell the tale of woe?
Will it the bitter wrong redress,
Or make one page of sorrow less?
Will it the erring one restore
Henceforth to "go and sin no more?"

They say! Oh! pause and look within;
See how thy heart inclines to sin;
Watch, lest in dark temptation's hour
Thou, too, shouldst slide beneath its power;
Pity the frail, weep o'er their fall,
Or speak of good, or not at all.

The St. Petersburg Herald declares the Christians in Turkey are in perate condition, and require ediate support, which Europe is to grant if she is in earnest.

A Vienna special to the Daily gives a report that the Emperor of Russia has addressed the Turkish embassador at St. Petersburg as follows: "The atrocities in Bulgaria have deprived Turkey of the sympathy of Europe. I shall act in a friendly manner toward Turkey if she treats the Christians better."

BELGRADE, Aug. 3.—After a fight at Pandirole three Turkish battalions and five hundred Circassians crossed the frontier into Servia. Gen. Horvatovich, the Servian commander, feigned retreat. The Turks followed him and occupied a village on the plain. On Tuesday the Servians attacked the Turks, taking them by surprise, and massacred the entire detachment.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—A special correspondent of the Herald, at Vienna, telegraphs, under date of August 2, that the foreign embassadors have at last interfered and entered protest against the present conduct of the campaign in Servia. The dispatch states that several embassadors have given warning to the Sublime Porte that unless the present system of enlisting volunteers as crusaders against Christians is stopped, Europe will interfere; and in consequence of this warning the Sublime Porte has ordered that no more volunteers be enlisted against the Servians.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—A Reuter's dispatch from Belgrade contains the following official bulletin: The Turks attacked Otto Gurgeessavitz' army at Tressibaba yesterday. The fighting lasted from one to eight o'clock in the afternoon. The center of the Turkish army was driven back one mile. Gen. Horvatovitch also attacked the Turks. The engagement continuing, the Servians took the entrenchment at Niamor and penetrated the Turkish camp.

A dispatch from Athens to the Times reports that the French and German embassadors have intimated to the Porte that they will leave Constantinople to-morrow unless indemnity for the two consuls murdered at Salonica is paid, and the sentences of the militia and naval commanders, publicly read. The Porte hesitates to execute the sentences, fearing the resentment of the Mussulmans.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 7.—The Porte has paid to the families of the German and French consuls murdered at Salonica an indemnity of £40,000. The new Governor of Salonica, accompanied by three military officers of high rank, will proceed thither to-day, in the presence of the troops, the judgment against those implicated in the outrage.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The Pall Mall Gazette's Berlin dispatch has the following: The National Zeitung says Servia, despairing of a successful issue of the war, has requested the powers to mediate in favor of peace. Servia's attempt to raise a war loan in Russia has proved to be a failure.

SEARCH FOR WIVES.—Where do men usually discover the women who afterward become their wives? is the question we have occasionally heard discussed, and the result it invariably comes to is worth mentioning to our young lady readers. Chance has much to do in the affair; but there are important governing circumstances. It is certain that few men make a selection from ball-rooms, or any other place of public gayety; and yearly as few are influenced by what may be called showing off in streets, or by any allurements of dress. Our conviction is that ninety-nine hundredths of all the finery with which the women decorate or load their persons, go for nothing, as far as husband-catching is concerned. Where and how, then, do men find their wives? In the quiet homes of their parents or guardians, at the fireside where the domestic graces and feelings are alone demonstrated. These are charms which must surely attract the light as well as the trifler. Against these all the finery and arts in the world sink into insignificance.

The following explanation of dog days is given by the Boston Traveller:

The term was applied by the ancients to that period of the year when Sirius, the brightest star in the constellation, known as Canis Major, rose and set with the sun, in the latitude of the Mediterranean. Owing to the precession of the equinoxes, that event now occurs as late as the tenth of August. The commencement of the Egyptian year was formerly simultaneous with this astronomical epoch. There is considerable difference between standard authorities as to the beginning and end of dies canicalares, or dog days. The following are some of the computations:

From July 3 to August 11.
From July 17 to August 26.
From July 21 to August 24.
From the latter part of July to the first of September.

At the session of the Summit District Conference, held in Magnolia, Miss., July 27 and 28, 1876, the following resolution was adopted by a rising vote, viz.:

Resolved, That this District Conference request that the presiding elder of Summit district request the Louisiana Conference to consent to a change of time of holding its session to December 27, so that ours may commence December 13, 1876.

PRATTVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference of Prattville district, Rev. A. J. Briggs, presiding elder, held its session in Prattville, Ala., July 7–9.

The presiding elder and nearly all the preachers in charge were present. The attendance on the part of the lay members was small, except from those circuits situated near Prattville. The visiting brethren were Prof. J. Massey, president of the Alabama Conference Female College, and Revs. J. L. Skipper and J. B. Anderson, of the Selma district. Rev. J. M. Mason was elected secretary, and Rev. T. Y. Abernethy assistant.

The presiding elder appointed a Committee on the General State of the Church, to whom the reports of the preachers in charge, as called for by the Discipline, were referred. This committee consisted of Rev. J. W. Rush, Rev. J. W. Shores, Rev. T. Y. Abernethy, Dr. C. M. Howard and R. W. Russell. This committee submitted four separate reports, which were adopted:

1. As to the spiritual state of the church.
2. As to missions in the district.
3. As to Sunday schools.
4. As to the financial system, etc.

These reports are too long to be included in this synopsis; but we will give the following items of interest:

1. There have been revivals in several of the charges, especially at Prattville, Marion, Summerfield and Lowndesboro. The spiritual state of the church is good throughout the district, with the exception of one or two charges. We must notice as a fact of very great significance that every boarder in Centenary Female Institute, who was not religious previously, was converted.

2. There is much unoccupied territory in the district, in which the committee recommend the formation of two or three mission circuits. Special attention is called to the fact that the Mormons have gained a strong foothold in the southern part of the district, and are on the increase.

3. The Sunday school interests are prospering.

4. There is in the district, with the exception of a very few charges, no definite financial plan, and the contributions to church purposes have been small.

The Conference passed the following resolution:

Resolved, By the members of this District Conference, That the preachers and stewards in this district will attempt to carry out the financial plan suggested in the Discipline, and that the presiding elder be requested to urge upon both, at each Quarterly Conference, the necessity of attending to this duty.

The interests of the church schools were represented by Rev. J. W. Rush, Rev. A. D. McVoy and Prof. J. Massey; and the Conference adopted unanimously a resolution recommending the Southern University, the Alabama Conference Female College and the Centenary Female Institute to the confidence and patronage of our people. The Conference also passed a resolution recommending the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and a resolution of thanks to the citizens of Prattville and cheerfully for their hospitality in entertaining the members of the Conference.

A special committee on missions was appointed, consisting of A. D. McVoy, E. S. Starr and G. L. Smith, who submitted a report urging the importance of sustaining and enlarging our missionary operations in foreign fields by making a more systematic and earnest effort to secure contributions and to revive the missionary spirit among the people. This report was adopted.

The following are the members elect to the Annual Conference: E. S. Starr, L. P., R. W. Russell, C. M. Howard and S. P. Smith. Reserves—G. L. Smith and Benjamin Rush.

The next session of the Conference will be held at Summerfield.

J. M. MASON, Sec.

TENSAS, LA.—Mr. Editor: I have deferred writing you, hoping the time would come when I could send you encouraging news from this unfortunate parish. That time is yet hid in futurity.

The overflow which visited us was not only a preventive against sowing the temporal seed, from which these people hoped to recover some of the losses of former years, but also prevented the sowing of spiritual seed, from which we hoped to gather much precious fruit. For four months the only means of traveling was by boat, by which means—paddling my own canoe—I occasionally succeeded in reaching my appointment, where I would meet with a few of the less timid brethren, and together we would worship Him who sitteth King over the flood. At one church the steps at both entrances have been washed away; some plank which we had on hand for repairing has also disappeared—borrowed, perhaps, by some one, but "without a probability of paying!" And the same pitiful tale of "hard times"—alas! too often true—is heard on every hand. Indeed, sir, a few families that I know of are suffering for the very necessaries of life, who a few years ago were in affluent circumstances.

Our hearts were made glad when we beheld the troublesome water receding. To ride on horseback again was quite a treat. Planters were at work in right good earnest, sowing in the mud, trying to keep pace with the water as it ran off. However, the overflow has been followed by a severe drouth, the effects of which have been truly disastrous not only to crops, but to the health of the country. The decayed vegetable matter and other filth occasioned by the inundation, sprinkled anon by a shower, or dampened by the dews, and during the day exposed to the hot summer's sun, emits a noxious, steamy stench, poisoning the air, which, unfortunately, we must breathe. Chills and fever, etc., are prevalent; consequently a meager attendance at the House of God.

Worse than all, we are experiencing a spiritual dearth. These troubles, instead of driving us nearer to God, seem to have driven many farther from him, until in our infirmity we have been almost ready to cry out: "All these things are against me." Brother, pray for us.

Yours in Christ,

WILLIAM HART.

TENSAS, LA., July 23, 1876.

SUMMIT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This body convened in the Methodist church in Magnolia, Miss., July 27, 1876, and was in session two days, having been supplemented by the Summit district camp meeting. Rev. James A. Godfrey, presiding elder, in the chair. C. S. Stewart was elected secretary.

All of the circuits and missions (fourteen) were represented. The reports of the preachers upon all the points required by the Discipline exhibited very satisfactory progress "in the spiritual state, and the attendance upon the ordinances and social meetings of the church," and in "Sunday schools, and the manner of conducting them." The financial system adopted has generally been the plan prescribed by the Discipline. The contributions to church purposes have not been good because of the hardness of the times. The condition of houses of worship is generally good. Parsonages are increasing in number, and the outlook for the district in all of these particulars is good. The presiding elder, and the preachers, both itinerant and local, are all earnest, energetic, zealous men, working mightily for the pulling down of satan's kingdom, and for the upbuilding of the kingdom of heaven in all parts of the work.

Committees were appointed on the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, on temperance and on Sunday school literature, and the reports submitted by them were adopted. Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College, addressed the Conference in the interest of the college and of education.

Delegates elected to the Annual Conference: Rev. J. E. Jagers, Dr. George Nicholson, Wiley Reaves and C. S. Stewart. Alternates—Magnus Talley and Henry C. Newsom.

The next Conference will be held at Summit, Miss.

C. S. STEWART, Sec.

BELMONT CT., ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I found a good membership at Belmont. I commenced visiting among them and holding prayer meetings. We redeemed the Sabbath school. I then pledged the congregation to read two chapters in the Testament every day. The congregation increased from my first appointment. On Friday night before the third Sabbath in this month I commenced a meeting at Belmont. We had mourners from the start. Bro J. S. Frazer came to my rescue on Monday, and stayed until Thursday; then back the next Monday, and left again on Thursday. Bro. Mellon, a local brother, rendered valuable service, and as far as we can learn there were about sixty conversions and forty-five accessions to the church. I never had a better-behaved and more orderly congregation than the young men of Belmont. I have not heard of a drunken man nor a fight in the vicinity of this place this year.

A few of the brethren made me a present of a fine suit of clothes. I wonder what Uncle John will say to this? One Uncle John thinks it very nice. Yours,

J. W. MCCANN.

SHUBUTA, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I am idle, waiting for the four P. M. train to bear me on to New York, via Indianapolis, Detroit, Niagara Falls and Albany. I am one of the fortunate furloughed. The third Quarterly Conference, Shubuta circuit, gave the pastor leave of absence for thirty days to visit the great Centennial Exhibition.

We had a fine meeting at Shubuta a short time ago. I think a deep and lasting impression was made. There were thirteen additions to the church-roll, of solid material. Rev. J. B. K. Smith did the preaching and singing. I am much encouraged with the present outlook on my work. Into the Master's hands we commit us.

Yours truly, T. S. WEST.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 1, 1876.

Selma District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference of the Selma district, Alabama Conference, met in Camden, Wilcox county, on Thursday, July 27, 1876. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. William M. Motley, of Selma, at eleven o'clock A. M. Bro. D. R. Blue, presiding elder, in the absence of a bishop, presided over the Conference.

Owing to some changes made at our last Annual Conference, Marion, the place selected for holding this session of the Conference, was put in the Prattville district; consequently another place had to be selected. Camden solicited it, and well did the good people take care of preachers, delegates and visitors, who were all alike welcomed to good homes, where every want was provided for.

Several distinguished ministers were present from other districts, among whom was Dr. Smith, president of the Southern University, who is traveling in the interest of that institution. I would here state, for the benefit of those who have sons to educate and have not decided where to send them, to make some sacrifice, if need be, to see and hear Dr. Smith, and the question will be decided at once.

The subject of our church schools is evidently eliciting an increase of interest, but not sufficiently so to justify boasting, for it is by no means what it should be. A good brother, whose heart is full of love for our schools, and who proves his zeal by his work in their behalf, very truthfully remarked that the progress and ultimate success of the church depended, in a large measure, upon the patronage care and pains bestowed upon our church schools.

That vital question, "the spiritual state of the church," and upon which all the interests of the church depend, was carefully considered; and while nothing exhibited in the reports indicated a backward tendency, they did not evidence a general advance in spirituality; consequently, to be candid, forces the declaration that, upon the whole, the report was not a favorable one. The subject of Sunday schools was fully ventilated, and the facts developed go to prove conclusively that this institution of the church is making rapid progress and accomplishing much good; but in answer to the question that will naturally rise just here, Why is this? How can one of the institutions of the church be prospering and progressing, when in a spiritual sense the church itself is almost in a state of retrogression? I give the only reason I know, and, I believe, the only one that exists: It is because of the adoption of a new and a better system.

The report from every charge on the district where the uniform lessons were used, and the Sunday schools supplied with our literature, was favorable and highly encouraging; while those not in the possession and use of these means, and where the union element prevailed to the greatest extent, opposite results were experienced. Therefore it is time that our church was waking up on this subject, and with reference to the Sunday schools urge the use of our own literature, and act in every case upon the principle that while we covet fraternal relations with all orthodox Christian denominations, yet we do not wish, we do not desire, we do not want any organic connection.

From the reports on finance I feel justified in the belief that in nearly every instance the assessments will be paid up by the close of the Conference year; for while the amount paid, up to this time, is comparatively small, yet except in two cases the pastors seemed hopeful of getting the balance before Conference.

The attendance was good. Fourteen clerical and thirty-one lay representatives were present. Every charge except two was represented by the pastor, both of whom were prevented on account of affliction.

The proceedings from the opening to the closing were characterized by a spirit of brotherly love and kindness.

Warren E. Kennedy, P. G. Wood, George Fontaine and John H. Malone were chosen as delegates, and J. R. John and P. D. Burford as reserve delegates to the Annual Conference.

The next District Conference will be held at Bell's Landing, Monroe county, Ala.

Report of the Committee

ON THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, TO THE SUMMIT DISTRICT CONFERENCE, JULY 28, 1876.

Your committee on the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE begs leave to report as follows:

We notice with satisfaction the progress and success of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the organ of our Annual Conference, which among the coexisting religious periodicals stands head above all in its clear, forcible vindication of the cardinal doctrines of our most holy religion, its fearless exposition of the tenets of false philosophy, its uncompromising intolerance of vice, and the mild, sweet spirit with which it woos and wins. In every number are "things new and old," fresh from the storehouse of wisdom, peculiarly adapted to the varied exigencies of every element of society. We feel that panegyric is beneath Christian dignity, yet we must say that the earnestness, diligence and faithfulness of the gifted editor of the ADVOCATE commends it to the esteem, love, support and prayers of every true Methodist within the limits of our district. As an evidence of the appreciation we have of our Conference organ, we recommend the adoption of the following resolutions, viz:

Resolved, That we, the Summit District Conference, fully indorse the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE as true to every interest of Methodism.

Resolved, That though we encourage a liberal patronage of the estimable Nashville Advocate, we do most earnestly enjoin every member of this District Conference to strenuously lend every energy to effect a wider circulation of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, till it is placed on every family stand in our district.

Resolved, That we tender to Rev. Dr. Parker and Rev. R. J. Harp our sympathy in their financial embarrassment, our joy at their continued advancement, our prayers for their complete success.

NOTICE BY THE EDITOR.—The publisher and editor both make their best bow to the Summit district. Only of them would have been there but for lack of time and money. They have not much of either to spare. Both are kept pretty close to their work, summer and winter. The pressure upon the publisher is indeed great, and his reliance is in the earnest and practical co-operation of all, preachers and laymen, to help him through these dull months.

THE FIG LEAF APRON.—There is a tribe on the western coast of India which has the singular custom of wearing an apron of leaves over the ordinary garment. Mr. Walhouse regards this as the survival of a very ancient custom, and thinks that the leaf was a badge of degradation. At present the women alone wear these aprons, believing that to leave them off will bring ill-luck.

THE OLD PASTOR'S DISMISSAL.

BY ELIZABETH COMINS.

"We need a younger man to stir the people
And lead them to the fold,"
The deacons said; "we ask your resignation.
Because—you're growing old."
The pastor bowed his deacons out in silence;
And tenderly the gloom
Of twilight hid him and his bitter anguish
Within the lonely room.

Above the violet hills the sunlight's glory
Hung like a crown of gold,
And from the noble church the organ's anthem
Adown the stillness rolled.
Assembled were the people for God's worship;
But in his study chair
The pastor sat unheeding, while the south wind
Caressed his snow-white hair.

A smile lay on his lips. His was the secret
Of sorrow's glad surcease,
Upon his forehead shone the benediction
Of everlasting peace.
"The ways of Providence are most mysterious,"
The deacons gravely said,
As wondering-eyed, and scared, the people crowded
About their pastor—dead!

"We loved him!" wrote the people on the coffin,
In words of shining gold;
And 'bove the broken heart they set a statue
Of marble, white and cold.
The end? Ah, no, the undiscovered country
Somewhere to brightness lies;
Though only space and stars may be discerned
By man's short sighted eyes.

Centenary College.

We considered, in a previous article, a few of the claims of Centenary College upon the patronage of the general public. We propose now to speak of those claims which appeal more directly to the people of Mississippi and Louisiana, and most directly to the two Conferences of our church that bear the names of these States.

These claims are embraced in the following assertion: Centenary College is both a geographical and an ecclesiastical necessity. It will require all of the space at our command for a single article to consider the first part of this double proposition, to wit: Centenary College is a geographical necessity. The precise length of radius over which the influence of a college should sweep, and from which its patronage will be drawn, depends so much upon local causes that it is not fixed by any general law in political economy. The age and character of the institution, the peculiar ideas represented by it, the liberality of its endowment, the density of the population, the prevalence of common schools and academies (the legitimate feeders of the true college,) and the consequent appreciation of liberal culture—all these and many more local peculiarities are determinates, so to speak, of the length of this radius. It is not true, on the one hand, that a single college, be it ever so richly endowed, can do the work of another, provided this other has a raison d'etre; a portion of this work will remain undone, to the detriment of society. Nor is it true, on the other hand, that the legitimate patronage of one can be divided among several colleges without impairing the efficiency of all. Two weak colleges, no more than two weak intellects, can ever do the work of one that is strong and vigorous. The legitimate plan of a college is determined by law; but the law is special and not general. In the case before us we find a college already established near enough to the boundary line of two States to be readily accessible to both. Its costly buildings and their accessories are the joint property of two corporations, one of which is domiciled in each of these States. These corporations are religious, and not political—a feature the public cannot fail to appreciate at this time of unparalleled political corruption and attempted mongrelism in the management of public schools. These corporations are, though, necessarily of a single sect, yet of that sect perhaps the most distinguished for liberality of sentiment and freedom from sectarian exclusiveness. It is hardly worth our while to consider the arguments that have been presented from time to time against what are termed "sectarian colleges." The time has passed when these arguments are even seriously urged. The more intelligent even of those of the general public, not members of religious denominations, have already recognized the great truth that the only true foundation of intellectual development is in the culture of the moral perceptions and faculties; and the remainder of the masses, provided they think at all, cannot fail to see in the protection of a private corporation their only safeguard against political corruption and unnatural associations. We have, then, in Centenary College all the elements essential to ultimate success already operative. If these elements are so impeded by local or external causes as to retard the expansion, or even entirely defeat the purposes of the institution, the same causes would bring disaster to any other institution that could be established to invite the patronage of the same geographical area. The question is, therefore: Is any college in these two States a necessity? The answer depends upon what we are and what we wish our children to be. Such a college was not a necessity when these States were the home of the aborigines. Such it is not now, if we and our children are to be like them. It is no argument against this position that colleges in other sections are open to our patronage. This statement appeals strongly to the individual, but can never reach the masses. The number of men in any community where the direct and immediate influence of educational institutions is unfelt, who entertain that appreciation of liberal culture which would lead them to send their children abroad to be educated, is extremely limited. The masses, if educated at all, are educated in home institutions. We wish we could write this thought in letters of fire, where every father in the land would be forced to read it. The advantages of an education in a home institution of forming class ties, and of naturalizing one's self to the intellectual, political and moral atmosphere where his work-days are to be spent—those advantages which appeal to the individual—we have not the space here to dwell upon, though if properly appreciated our home institutions would be better patronized. The truth that here claims all our thought, and to which public attention should be riveted with bands of steel, is that unless our home institutions are kept up the masses will remain uneducated. And what does this mean? It means what ignorance always means. It means corruption in high places, it means vice and misery in places high and low; it means, in this age when other States and countries are pressing popular education forward with a rapidity heretofore unknown in the world's history, it means stepping aside in the race of life for others to win the goal; it means being left behind in every material interest, and seeing others win the crown of laurel that the God of nature has woven for us. This is what it means; and it is because we have seen in the people of these two States, in the very audiences that have assembled from year to year at the anniversary exercises of this very institution, an intelligence and appreciation that will brook no such disaster as this that we are led to say that Centenary College is a geographical necessity. That this intelligence and appreciation are attributable in no small degree to the influence of the college itself no reflecting mind can doubt; for every true college has within itself the germs of its own growth and development, and through the arteries of its own ever-extending influence will in time awaken an interest in education that will flow back in streams of life-blood to its own heart. But while these germs are fostering the infant college needs external support until the arteries are filled; and Centenary College, as we have once before remarked, has since the war entered upon a new life, and needs the sympathy and support, the patronage and material aid of all lovers of learning and friends of education. We have said that the college needs this support; but how much more do the young men of these two States need the nourishment of mind and soul it can give! If we could reach these young men, whose education (for they are being educated) is now drawn far too frequently from the slimy pools of idleness on every corner of our streets, or if we could reach that more hopeful class, whose seed-time is passed in the aimless drifting of plantation life, and turn them all into our schools and colleges, the benefit to these institutions would be swallowed up in the greater benefit to society; for if the training there received were symmetrical—if the whole man, moral, intellectual and physical, were cultivated as is sought to be done in Centenary—a period would be put to political corruption, to poverty, to crime. Then there would be needed no arguments to demonstrate the necessity of our educational institutions.

W. H. GOODALE.

Hints to Professors.

A PASTORAL LETTER.

MY DEAR FRIEND: You are a professor of the name and faith of Jesus Christ. Let me appeal to you affectionately, in that sacred name, whether you realize the solemn nature of the profession you have made?

Do you feel what it is to be a Christian? And do you feel the dreadful danger there is in being deceived in this most momentous of all questions? "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."—Second Corinthians v, 17. To be a Christian is not to be baptized in the name of Christ; it is not to make a profession of religion; it is not to go to the house of God and gather with his people around the table of our Lord; it is not by any outward rites done to you, nor by any acts of your own done for you. To be a Christian is to be born again by the power of the Spirit of God—to be new-created in Christ Jesus. No person can experience this work of the Holy Spirit without a great change. It must lead to new views, new feelings, new purposes and a new life. Old things pass away; all things become new. Has this vital, radical change taken place with you? Have your views of the character of God such as the unrenewed do not have—of his glorious holiness, of his perfect justice, of his absolute sovereignty in the salvation of sinners, and of his infinite mercy to the chief of sinners in Jesus Christ?

And what think you of Christ? Are your views of him those that the Spirit gives in the new creation? Is he to you God manifest in the flesh? Is he a Savior who, as divine, as very God, has a right to say unto you: "Thy sins are forgiven thee?" And is he one who, as the Son of man, has laid down his life for you, dying for you, the just for the unjust, that he might bring you to God? Is your only hope of salvation in the vicarious sacrifice, the complete atonement, the perfect righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ? Looking wholly and forever away from yourself as in any way or degree meriting eternal life, do you lay your hand upon the head of the Lamb of God, and trust him to bear and to take away all your guilt?

And what are your views of the Holy Spirit? Do you truly regard him as a distinct person of the ever-blessed Trinity—the sole Author of your regeneration, if you have been regenerated—the Applier of the redemption of Christ—the Enlightener of every spiritual mind—the Author of faith—the Sanctifier, Comforter, the Guide of all the people of God?

And are your views of sin, and of yourself personally as a sinner, such as the natural man cannot receive? Do you feel that there is resting upon you, if out of Christ, the awful weight of sin and guilt that rests upon the race, and from which there is no deliverance but by the redemption of Christ? Is your sense of sin such as compels you to feel your absolute necessity of the mercy of God, the blood of Christ, and the power of the Holy Ghost to deliver you?

Have your views of the world changed? Is it to you the false and failing and unsubstantial thing it once was not? Are its pleasures and its sorrows, its riches and its wants, its honors and its scorn, at once and equally to you the passing shadows that flit across your pathway to eternity? And do the realities of the world to come rise before you, and by an ever-present power strengthen you to run with patience the race set before you? Do you live, ever remembering that there is a judgment, a heaven, a hell, an eternity? Do you live above the world, with your affections fixed on things above, and not on things on the earth? Is your heart so stayed on God, your faith so fixed on Christ, that if this night should be your last you could rejoice to lie down and die?

Once more, are you faithful to the church with which you are connected? Do you love your church? Do you pray for her welfare? Do you labor for her peace and prosperity? Do you uphold the hand of your pastor by your prayers, your works, and especially by your regular presence upon the services of the house of God? Do you make it a point of conscience and principle to attend all the regular services of your own church, when the providence of God does not prevent you? In every church there are liable to be wandering stars—persons carried about by every wind of doctrine, ever learning, but never coming to the knowledge of the truth. Let it not be so with you. Being rooted and grounded in faith and love, may you grow up unto the stature of a perfect man in Christ Jesus.

Are you faithful in your closet, in the daily study of the word of God, and in secret prayer? If the head of a family, is there a family altar in your house, where you offer up the morning and evening sacrifice, and train your children for heaven? Do you meet with your pastor and your fellow-Christians in the weekly prayer-meetings of your church, to unite your supplications with theirs for the constant presence and power of the Holy Ghost? And is your life before the world that which glorifies your Father in heaven? Can men take knowledge of you that you have been with Jesus? Oh! be not deceived in this great matter. Remember that many who have professed the name of Christ on earth shall stand at his left hand in the judgment. What if you should be with them! Oh! think of it—think of it as a matter of eternity; think of it especially if you have been resting on a false foundation, as a matter of possibility; and give now all diligence to make your calling and election sure. Work out your salvation with fear and trembling. The time is short; the end of all things to you is at hand; whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, in settling this awful question of your eternal destiny, do it with thy might; for there is no work nor device, no knowledge nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest. You will bear me witness that I have but one desire for you in this thing—it is that you may be presented, at last, faultless before the presence of God with exceeding joy. If this shall be the result I shall be satisfied; if not, I would wash my hand of your blood. That God may give you grace to be faithful unto death, that you, with all the redeemed of Christ, may receive the crown of life, is the prayer of

YOUR AFFECTIONATE PASTOR.

Heroines of Early Methodism.

MR. EDITOR: Too much cannot be said in praise of this valuable little book.

In Mrs. Wesley's life the home-mother, the true housewife, as well as the leader and director of souls to the only fount of continual and never-failing bliss and joy, is portrayed. Poverty, misfortune and death cannot daunt the pious, believing soul of such a woman. Truly she leaned on the "Rock of Ages," and rested near the shadow of the "great white throne." How few are found, in these degenerate times, who strive by precept or example to imitate this mother in Israel, the foundress of Methodism.

As one not worthy to mention the laws in a Christian character, we will pass by the eccentricities of Mrs. Fletcher, and think only of her noble renunciation of home and friends for Christ's sake, and the home she made for herself, where the orphans, the poor of the earth, and preachers of God's word also, found a home. Every one could not commend her in addressing the audience in the chapel; yet we believe "the end sanctified the means;" and the aiding of her husband in his good work, the great assistance given to deliver perishing souls from earthly snares, and lead their bleeding hearts to the cross of the only true God, can pardon, if pardon were necessary, the deviation from the strict rule.

Of Mrs. Coke and Lady Huntingdon—the first in her narrow sphere shone with all the grace, patience and humility of a spirit acceptable to God, never thinking of cost to life, health and strength where her Master's work must be performed—that plea which so many would have taken, relinquishing all else on that score. The second, one of the highest in an aristocratic country, a peeress of the realm, sacrificing all earthly position, glory, honor and wealth for the sake of the kingdom not made with hands; so living that in dying the words could greet her: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter into thy rest!"

Lady Maxwell, and Grace Murray, in the bloom of early youth and beauty, alike widowed and childless—they bowed meekly before the will of the almighty Father, being ruled and guided through all things by his omnipotent arm; one in the seclusion of her home sending forth her wealth to aid in every good work—"erecting chapels, contributing to the support of the aged, relieving the sick and indigent, and to the instruction of youth;" her good works seem almost endless. The other—brave-hearted Grace Murray—without the wealth, but with personal strength and undaunted courage, toiled in her Master's service; each one in their way having some good work to do, which being performed, they departed in peace.

A Correction.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please allow me to correct quite a grave mistake that I unintentionally made in my last article for the ADVOCATE? In copying the article I left out three words, which left the sentence incomplete and changed the meaning. As being apropos to the subject under consideration, and as showing the capabilities of woman under favorable circumstances, I said that "one woman had translated the Bible from the original Greek," and should have added the words: "In modern times." And further on I mentioned that "no one man had ever done the same." The word over was also an oversight. I suppose I was rather too positive, even as it stands corrected, as Dr. Clarke translated the whole Bible from the Hebrew and Chaldaic for his own use and to assist him in writing his great commentary. But as the sentence in question was mere mention, I attached no importance whatever to it, only as being rather a remarkable work for a woman.

The whole and only desire I had in entering this controversy was to try to prove that women had authority from the holy word to work for Jesus. If souls are saved from sin, what matters it by or through whose instrumentality the work is done?

If I have offended any one of the readers or contributors of the ADVOCATE, I did it unintentionally. St. Peter, in his first epistle, says: "And above all things, have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover the multitude of sins."

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

NATHANIEL RAY was born in Georgia in 1797. He was the third child of sixteen children. He moved to Alabama in 1818, and in 1839 moved to Mississippi with three sons—first to Winston, and then to Neshoba county, where he died on the twelfth of May, 1876, aged seventy-nine years. In 1820 he married Miss Margaret Eads, of Tuskaloosa county, Ala. The wife, six children and thirty-one grandchildren survive him.

Bro. Ray devoted his life to planting and farming, in which he succeeded so as to provide for the maintenance and education of his family, and in the accumulation of property.

He volunteered in the war of 1812, and fought valiantly for the country he loved. He was then but a boy.

Bro. Ray united with the church in 1828, under the ministry of E. V. Levert. His conversion was clear, and his religious experience satisfactory to himself. Doubts were removed. He was strong in faith, giving glory to God, and his walk and conversation were satisfactory to others, insomuch that he was soon made a leader and steward in the church of God, in which offices he long continued faithful and efficient. His family worship was constant and regular. He read the word and sang the morning and evening hymn, and his children will remember his favorite hymns:

"Once more, my soul, the rising day Salutes my waking eyes,"

and

"The day is past and gone."

Such was the fervor of his devotions and the consistency of his life, with the blessing of God, that every one of his six children have been brought to Christ, are within the pale of the church, are seeking the city of God, and are prosperous in life. Nearly all his grandchildren are also members of the church, having embraced religion in their youth. His family government was mild, but very firm. He never allowed a child to disobey.

As a citizen he was highly esteemed, and his aid and counsel were often sought in settling personal difficulties, and in the arbitration of claims. And, though not highly educated in his youth, he was a man of mark—a well-balanced character. He learned to govern himself—to control his temper, to regulate his desires—and those who knew him best do not recollect his ever being blamed for a wrong. His Christian or moral courage was equal to any emergency.

We wonder at the grace of God in the fashioning of so perfect a character, eliminating its sins, smoothing and rounding the roughness of its corners, and stamping upon it the loveliness and beauty of holiness.

During the last forty years of his life he was afflicted in body—a large part of this time an invalid. Dyspepsia, disease of the liver, pulmonary consumption, preyed upon his physical constitution for forty years, while his soul ripened for the kingdom of heaven.

He was taken ill on Wednesday, the fourth of May, with hemorrhage of the lungs; suffered from pain in the lungs and violent cough, with occasional relief of the symptoms, until his death on Friday. But his mind was not clouded nor his faith weak. Fully apprised of the approach of death, he talked of his readiness to go; exhorting all to live for God, saying to them: "When you come to this place you will need God's favor." He spoke of Thomas Clinton, Barnabas Lipkin, Thomas Abercrothy, James and Asbury Shanks; and while he spoke the fire of devotion would burn, and swell the raptures of his soul to overflowing. He would often break out in praise to God, in the language: "Glory be to God!" "Bless the Lord, O my soul!" sometimes repeating the words:

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are," etc.

When thought to be dying his son, Rev. Andersan Ray, asked: "Are you reconciled to the will of God?" and, looking him full in the face, he answered: "Yes; I know I am going into the valley of the shadow of death, but I am not afraid. My Savior is with me." His last words, I think, were: "I am almost home;" and soon after he sank quietly into his last sleep, from which he will doubtless wake in the likeness of the Redeemer.

There are many who will think of Nathaniel Ray, and say: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

H. JONES.

DANIEL A. CHRISTENBERRY was born March 1, 1821, in Mecklenburg county, N. C.; was married to Miss Margaret H. Moore, April 3, 1845; emigrated to Alabama in 1846, and settled near Summerfield, Dallas county; removed to Perry county in 1851, and settled near Mount Zion church, where he breathed his last on Sunday, June 25, 1876.

Being reared by pious parents, his youthful mind was early impressed with the importance of religion—before he knew the comfort and solid joy realized in its heartfelt experience. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in May, 1840, and professed religion in October following. From the day of his conversion to his death he lived in sweet communion with his heavenly Father, and was ever ready to give a reason of the hope that was in him.

He was one of the most consistent, uniform Christians I ever knew, exemplifying in his daily life and conversation the blessed reality of the Christian religion, and realizing that "all her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." He loved the doctrines and usages of the church, and for many years he faithfully served her in the several capacities of trustee, steward, class-leader and Sunday-school superintendent, often filling two of these offices at the same time; and in regard to each of them it may be truly said, He hath done what he could.

From the year 1852 to his death he was a constant subscriber to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, except awhile during the war, and one year since, when he took the Nashville Christian Advocate.

He needs no monument of marble to commemorate his virtues, for his works do praise him, and his name is enshrined in many hearts, who will rise up in that day and call him blessed.

For several months past he lived in constant expectation of death, and, like the wise virgins, he kept his lamp trimmed and burning. He was partially stricken with paralysis in December, 1874, and again in April, 1876. He never fully recovered from these attacks, but at times was able to attend church and visit his friends. On the morning of his death he was more than usual, and said he felt much better; but about eleven o'clock A. M. he staggered under the third paralytic stroke, and ere the sun had disappeared beneath the western horizon, and the light of the earthly sphere had faded away, his spirit was released from its tenement of clay, and was wafted on angels' pinions to that clime where Sabbaths never end.

Bro. Christenberry was by occupation a farmer, and by the sweat of his brow earned a handsome support, and of the means he liberally contributed to every church enterprise. Scrupulously exact and strictly honest, he had the entire confidence of all who knew him.

As a neighbor he was all that could be desired—as a friend he was generous to a fault; as a citizen he was upright, loyal and law-abiding. During the late civil war, when men of his age were called for, he went forth in his country's defense, and the universal testimony of his comrades in arms is that he was one of the few who carried religion into camp life and came out undefiled.

He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss, but had the satisfaction of seeing them all members of the church militant. May they observe his precepts, follow his example, and finally all gain admittance into the church triumphant.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

SISTER IAMINDA A. BALDRIDGE departed this life June 1, 1876, aged seventy years and one month. She joined the Methodist Church in 1832; was then converted, and never doubted of her acceptance with God from that hour until her death. Being an efficient member of the Fayette Female Financial Association of Fayette circuit, Mississippi Conference, at a called meeting thereof the following preamble and resolutions were adopted, to wit:

Whereas, It behooves us to submit to the will of God in this, as in all things, but lament the departure of this devoted worker from our midst; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we will cherish her memory, and we will also tender our sympathies to her aged companion and children in their bereavement; and recommend them to trust in God, who was her solace in life and her comforter in death.

Resolved, That we will send a copy of this move to the family, and another to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

EMMA E. R. ARMSTRONG, Sec.

SISTER MARY FRANCIS was born on the seventh of April, 1808, in the parish of Catahoula, La. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in the year 1833, and lived a consistent member of the same, enjoying the full assurance of pardon and peace. After an illness of a few days she died, at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Hamblen, in the parish of Catahoula, La., May 21, 1876, near the place where she was born and raised. A few days before she called the writer was with her, and after religious services had a close talk with her upon her future prospects. She said that she had "no fear of death, no clouds intervening between me and my Savior." She seemed to be perfectly conscious that she would not recover from the severe attack from which she was then suffering.

Sister Francis has left a large family of children, grandchildren and many friends to mourn her loss. Her place in society will not be easily filled. She was the only one remaining, I believe, who was at the burial or interment of the lamented Rev. Richmond Nolley.

C. R. GOODALE.

LITTLE C. W., son of M. M. and S. W. Mashburn, was born July 6, 1874, and was drowned in a spring near Woodstock, Calhoun county, Ala., April 3, 1876.

Sweet little Walker, just before going to the spring, came into the house and gave his now bereaved mother some beautiful flowers, and sat on her lap and kissed her, and directly went out. Soon after his mother went in search of the little fellow, and, coming to the spring; but, oh, the sad news that met her: "He is in the spring!" His body was borne to the house, but angels with snowy wings had conveyed his spirit beyond the last river, to that Savior who hath said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me."

R. G. ROAN.

DIED, in Woodville, Miss., on the eighteenth of July, 1876, MAGGIE HOWARD, third daughter of Dr. L. W. and Mrs. M. Magruder, aged seven years, four months and fifteen days. Another little lamb is safe in the fold of the Good Shepherd. Maggie was a bright child, full of life and promise. She loved her books and Sunday school, was gifted with remarkable musical talent, delighted to sing the Sunday school songs; and though her voice will no longer be heard when her sisters and brothers gather in the home circle to sing those songs, we know she is singing praises to God in that better land, "where all tears are wiped away" forever. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

IN THE NIGHT-WATCHES.

BY HENRY VAUGHAN.

Dear night! this world's defeat;
The stop to busy fools; care's check and curb;
The day of spirits; my soul's calm retreat
Which none disturb!
Christ's progress and his prayer-time;
The hours to which high heaven doth chime.

God's silent, searching flight;
When my Lord's head is filled with dew, and all
His locks are wet with the clear drops of night;
His still, soft call;
His knocking-time; the soul's dumb watch,
When spirits their fair kindred catch.

There is in God, some say,
A deep but dazzling darkness; as men here
Say it is late and dusky, because they See not all clear.
O! for that night; where I in him
Might live invisible and dim!

The Observance of Sunday.

Something more is meant by religious observance than mere attendance at the offices of public worship. Far too many of us religion begins at the church door—and ends there. We resume our worldliness of thought and feeling on the very threshold of the sanctuary; whereas the "pearl of days" is given us that we may learn how to aspire to better and higher things than the world can offer us. It is then that the mind should dwell in contemplation of the works of God, and enjoy the possibilities and probabilities of the spiritual life. It is then, if at no other time, that the soul should be possessed with the instinct of immortality, with

The desire of the moth for the star,
Of the night for the morrow,
The devotion to something afar
From the sphere of our sorrow, yearning after the sights and sounds of the Unseen—the infinite mysteries of God. Religious observance, too, will comprehend the utterance, if occasion offer, of a wise and kindly word to the young; of other but cordial intercourse with our friends; of moderate and intelligent discussion of church topics; and of such active participation in church work as we may feel ourselves fitted for. We may do something to lighten and enliven the Sunday school, too often made a kind of penance chamber, or we may seek out the poor and afflicted, and do our part to bind up their wounds and relieve their sufferings. Then this one day out of the seven which we dedicate to God affords us an opportunity for consulting the works of the great Divines, of silent meditation and prayer, of studying the Father's two-fold revelation of his power and mercy—the Bible and the face of nature. Whatever tends to the edification of the mind and the purification of the soul, whatever assists in making known to others that divine love which has been revealed to us, provides the character of a religious observance, and will bless, sanctify and make happy the Christian's Sabbath.

But Sunday is likewise a day of rest; and in this sense it is so important a national institution that the law wisely instituted in stepping forward to protect it. Everybody knows that a large proportion of cases of insanity is traceable, annually, to an imprudent and sinful persistence in Sunday labor. Everybody knows that were there no ecclesiastical day of rest, the Legislature, in the interest of the people, would have to establish one. Rest, of course, does not mean inaction; but it implies a putting aside of our usual pursuits. We gain the relaxation we require by devoting our attention to fresh objects of interest, fresh materials for thought—by entering upon a sphere of duty which in all respects differs from that of our ordinary life. The relaxation must be physical and moral, as well as intellectual; and therefore long excursions would seem to be pretty incompatible with a day of rest. And never was such a blessed pause in the battle of life more needful than it is now, when the battle is fought so fiercely, and the storm and stress of it tell heavily on the strong! Why, if men did but know what was best for their own interests, they would thank God for the Sunday; and they would jealously oppose any attempt to deprive it of its calm and holy character. It is the wise man's pleasure, it is the part of man's protection; and if it be upheld for the spiritual advantage of the believer, it is necessary, also to the welfare of the State.—Scottish Guardian.

Chinese Foot Deformity.

The other day I heard that a Chinese lady of rank had lately come with her husband on a visit to Santa Barbara, and her feet were only two inches and three-quarters long. Making inquiries of our laundry boy, Ah Toy, as to where the Chinese lady with little feet could be seen, he told me her husband was a cousin of Sing Lee, proprietor of a wash-house in town, and she was staying there.

Sing Lee courteously conducted us through the dark wash-house, where men were beating clothes with bamboo sticks, scrubbing them in the tubs with bamboo brushes, and a Chinese boy was cooking dinner in a large pot over a little furnace, to a range of berths like those of ocean steamers, and, lifting the curtains of one bed, introduced us to the lady by saying: "This is my cousin!" The woman immediately rose from the stool on which she was sitting and extended her hand to each of us, saying: "How do?" Her husband was sitting by her side, holding a boy baby; he was also very much pleased at our visit, and proud of the three we took of his boy, who was already dressed in trousers and gown, and wore a red silk turban cap on his head. The wife was more elegantly dressed than any Chinese I had yet seen. Her hair was elaborately dressed, and fastened up in puffs and coils with long dagger-shaped pins of gold. Her gown or robe was loose, extended to the knee, and had big, loose sleeves, extended by hoops; her robe was of dark blue silk, embroidered with yellow and red silk; her arms had several bracelet ornaments; her hands were small and well formed, and covered with rings; she wore big hoops of gold in her ears; she had a pretty face, oval-shaped, large eyes, small mouth and dimpled cheeks. She smiled frequently as we conversed with Sing Lee, but took no part in the conversation. I think she only could speak a very few sentences. When I said we wanted to see her foot, she evidently understood, for she laughed, and put out her tiny, painted slippers. I got on my knee, and took her foot in my hand and examined it closely, and measured it. The foot and leg were bound tightly in white satin, apparently sewed neatly around the limb. There were bands of gold around her ankles; her ankle measured ten inches in circumference at its smallest place; her foot was two and three-quarter inches long, two inches broad in the middle, and one inch at the toes; over the white satin band or stockings she wore blue satin slippers, embroidered in silver. The slippers came almost to a point at the toe. She could only walk by the aid of her cane, which was on the bed beside her. Even with its aid her walk was limping and painfully slow. The doll-baby foot, so elaborately decorated in blue and silver, hanging to the big ankle, which was, of course, disproportionately large, looked anything but handsome, according to my standard of aristocratically molded limbs and feet. Her legs looked like sticks of wood whittled down to a point for a foot. But she was evidently very vain of her deformity. Her baby, one year old, had feet five inches long, but he was a boy, and entitled to masculine freedom of limb.—Correspondent of Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Bible and Its Foes.

Rogers, in his "Superhuman Origin of the Bible," says: "If collected from the earliest times to the present day, infidel books would occupy far more than a thousand times the space of the one volume against which they are directed, and would certainly be much more numerous than the works that all other sacred books ever had the honor of provoking, either for or against them. If all these books were placed in one library, and this single one set on the table in the middle of it, and a stranger were told that this book—affirmed to be, for the most part, the work of a number of unlearned and obscure men belonging to a despised nation called the Jews—had drawn upon itself for its exposure, confutation and destruction this multitude of volumes, I imagine he would be inclined to say: 'Then I presume this little book was annihilated long ago; though how it could be needful to write a thousandth part so much for any such purpose I cannot comprehend; for if the book be what these authors say, surely it should not be difficult to show it to be so; and if so, what wonderful madness to write all these volumes?' How surprised would he then be to learn that they were felt to be not enough; that similar works were being multiplied every day, and never more actively than at the present time; and still to no purpose in disabusing mankind of this same frenzy! He would learn, indeed, that, so far from accomplishing the object, the new volumes are little more than necessary to replace those of this fruitful yet fruitless literature, which is continually sinking into oblivion. But the volume itself survives both friends and foes. Without being able to speak one word on its own behalf but what it has already said; without any power of explanation or rejoinder in deprecation of the attacks made upon it, or to assist those who defend it, it passes along the ages in majestic silence. Impassive amidst all this tumult of controversy, in which it takes no part, it might be likened to some great ship floating down a mighty river like the Amazon or Orinoco, the shores of which are inhabited by various savage tribes. From every creek or inlet, from every petty port or bay, sally flotillas of canoes, some seemingly friendly, some seemingly hostile, filled with warriors in all the terrors of war-paint and their artillery of bows and arrows. They are hostile tribes; and, soon turning the weapons against one another, assail each other with great fury and mutual loss. Meantime the noble vessel silently moves on through the scene of confusion, without deigning to alter its course or to fire a shot. Perhaps here and there a scandal casts a compassionate glance from the lofty bulwarks, and wonders at the hardihood of those who come to assail his leviathan?"

The Temple of Jerusalem.

It is probably no exaggeration to say that more has been written regarding the temple at Jerusalem than in respect to any other building in the known world, and unfortunately, it may be added, more that is wild and utterly untenable. This last peculiarity arises from several causes: First, because all the earlier restorers were entirely ignorant of the ground on which the temple stood, and of the local circumstances that governed its construction. It was not, indeed, till the spot was surveyed by the late Mr. Catherwood, in 1833, and his plan published on a sufficient scale in 1842, that restorers had such a map of the ground as would enable them to adjust their measurements to the locality with anything like certainty. Though that plan was wonderfully perfect, considering the circumstances under which it was made, it has since been superseded by that made under the direction of Capt. (now Maj.) Wilson, R. E., in 1865, which leaves nothing to be desired in this respect. It can be depended upon almost to inches, and has been engraved on a scale sufficiently large for all architectural purposes. A second cause of the wildness of the restoration hitherto attempted is that the Temple of Jerusalem was quite unique. Not only had the Jews only this one temple, but, so far as we know, it was entirely of their own invention, and utterly unlike the temples of any of the nations around them. It certainly, at all events, was quite unlike the temples of the Egyptians or Greeks. It may have had affinities with those of the Babylonians or Assyrians; but, notwithstanding all that has been done of late years, we know so very little of what the temples of Mesopotamia were that these hardly help us even at this day, and the assumption that this might be so was of no use whatever to early restorers. Having thus no analogies to guide them, and as it is literally and absolutely true that not one stone remains on another of the temple properly so called, it is not to be wondered at that early restorers failed to realize the truth, and indulged in fancies which were utterly untenable. In nine cases out of ten their object was to produce a building which would be worthy of Solomon, in all his glory, rather than a sober production of the very moderate building described in the Bible.—Cotemporary Review.

A Genius at Marbles.

Ireland has become noted for its great orators. One of the most prominent of these was John Philpot Curran. Through his learning and eloquence he rose to great prominence as a lawyer and a statesman. He was born in the middle of the last century, and ended his illustrious career in 1817. When a little boy at play with his village playmates, little dreaming of his future greatness, the passing glance of an intelligent stranger discovered in him the incident indications of genius, and became the kind instrument of his education and elevation to future eminence. In the midst of a large social gathering, Curran, one evening, made the following address to his companions:

"Allow me, gentlemen, to give you a sentiment. When a boy, I was one morning playing at marbles in the village of Ball-Alley (Ireland), with a light heart and a lighter pocket. The gibe and the jest went gladly round, when suddenly among us appeared a stranger, of a remarkable and very cheerful aspect; his intrusion was not the least restraint upon our merry little assemblage. He was a benevolent creature, and the days of infancy (after all, the happiest we shall ever see) perhaps rose upon his memory. Heaven bless him! I see his fine form at the distance of half a century, just as he stood before me in the little Ball-Alley, in the day of my childhood. His name was Boyse; he was the rector of Newmarket. To me he took a particular fancy. I was winning and full of waggery; thinking everything that was eccentric, and by no means sure of my eccentricities; every one welcome to a share of them, and I had plenty to spare, after having frightened the company. Some sweetmeats easily tempted me home with him. I learned from Boyse my alphabet and my grammar, and the rudiments of the classics. He taught me all the confidence, and then sent me to a school at Middleton. In short, he made me a man.

"I recollect, it was about thirty-five years afterward, when I had a seat in Parliament, or my return one day from court, I found an old gentleman seated alone in my drawing-room, his feet familiarly placed on each side of the Italian marble chimney-piece, and his whole air bespeaking the consciousness of one quite at home. He turned round—it was my friend of Ball-Alley. I rushed instinctively into his arms, and burst into tears. Words cannot describe the scene which followed.

"'You are right, sir,' I exclaimed,' you are right. The chimney-piece is yours—the pictures are yours—the house is yours. You gave me all I have—my friend—my benefactor!'

"He dined with me, and in the evening I caught the tear glistening in his fine blue eye when he saw poor little Jack, the creature of his bounty, rising in the House of Commons to reply to a right honorable. Poor Boyse! He is now gone; and he sure had a larger deposit of practical benevolence in the court above."—Rev. E. Bannister, D. D.

As a farmer was getting in his hay the other day he noticed an unusual commotion among the swallows, which had built a long row of nests under the eaves of his barn. They appeared greatly excited, flying rapidly about and filling the air with their cries of distress. As the load of hay upon which he was riding passed into the barn, he saw that a young swallow in a nest directly over the door had caught its neck in a crack between two shingles and was unable to liberate itself. He stopped his team and set the young bird free, restoring it to the nest. Upon his return to the barn with his next load of hay, noticing that the swallows were quiet, he examined the crack, and found they had filled it completely with mud, so that, no matter how enterprising or how foolish the young swallow might be, he could not again endanger his life or the peace of that community by any experiments upon that crack.

Go out in the spring-time, among the meadows that slope from the shores of the Swiss lakes to the roots of the lower mountains. There, mingled with the gentians and the white narcissus, the grass grows deep and free; and as you follow the winding mountain paths, beneath arching boughs all vulled and dim with blossoms, paths that forever droop and rise over the green banks and wolds sweeping down in scented undulation, steep to the blue water, studded here and there with new-mown heaps, filling all the air with finer sweetness—look up toward the higher hills, where the waves of everlasting green roll silently into their long inlets among the shadows of the pines, and we may, perhaps, at last know the meaning of these quiet words of the one hundred and forty-seventh psalm: "He maketh grass to grow upon the mountain."—John Ruskin.

Nearness of life toward the Lamb will necessarily involve greatness of love to him. As nearness to the sun increases the temperature of the various planets, so close communion with Jesus raiseth the heat of the affections toward him.—Spurgeon.

Religious Intelligence.

—A circulating library and public reading-room have been added to the attractions of the United Presbyterian mission in Damascus.

—The statistical reports of the Southern Presbyterian Church, now being made up for publication, show an encouraging progress over last year.

—The Pope is about to publish an encyclical, which the Tablet (now the special advocate of lynch law against Protestants) says peremptorily decides the questions about Free Masonry in Brazil.

—It is hoped that the threatened split in the Reformed Church of France will be averted. A compromise has been suggested which is satisfactory to the main body of Liberals. It accepts the apostles' creed as the symbol of faith, and acknowledges the authority of the synod.

—The Roman Catholics are making very vigorous efforts to strengthen their position in South Africa. Their headquarters is Graham's Town, the capital of Kaffraria. They are seeking to enlist the sympathies of the wealthier colonists, through the higher education which they offer to their children.

—The synod of the Old Catholic Church of Switzerland was held June 8. There were present 206 members, 66 ecclesiastics and 140 laymen. The synod proceeded at once to the election of a bishop, the most prominent name being that of M. Herzog, cure of Olten, who was elected by 117 votes. The other candidates received 34 and 7 votes respectively.

—One of our Baptist exchanges states that the newly-elected chief of the Cherokee Nation, Ouchalatta, is a member of the Baptist Church. On the twenty-sixth of December he was ordained as minister. He is described as "a full-blooded native, medium-sized, about fifty years of age, and distinguished for his uprightness of life and eloquence as a speaker." Three of the supreme judges of the Creek Nation are also Baptists, as are the superintendent of public instruction and the national treasurer.

—A Presbyterian missionary of Syria writes that the Jesuits are building a large and costly college at Beyrout, and that the Maronite Bishop of Beyrout (Roman Catholic) has stolen a march on the Protestants, and actually published a commentary on the New Testament. We should be glad if we could believe that this indicated the return of the Romanist missionaries to some of their old intellectual work. They have long been in the rear ranks in all intellectual labor on the mission fields of the world.

—The French Roman Catholic newspapers are filled with authoritative accounts of nine appearances of the Virgin to a shepherd boy at Si. Palais, a small town in the Lower Pyrenees. At the second appearance the Virgin, so the story runs, intrusted him with a celestial secret, which he was charged not to reveal. The Virgin also told him to visit a stream, the waters of which were healing. The priests, as usual, are at the bottom of the affair, which is a successful trick for thousands of French people are wending their way to the Pyrenees to drink the waters and see the boy.

BAPTISMS IN JAPAN.—Rev. N. Brown, D. D., communicates the following to the Baptist Weekly: There is a widespread inquiry among the natives, and the Episcopalians have lately baptized seven by immersion. Just now there is a tremendous excitement because Kawakatsu, my Scripture reviser, has asked Mr. Ballah to dismiss him to join our church. Mr. Ballah has written him a letter worthy of a pope, telling him he cannot be baptized again without violating his most solemn vows, and incurring awful guilt, etc.; but I expect to baptize him into our church next Sabbath, unless they invent some new device to keep him back. He seems firm, and yet he has a hard trial to face. All the missionary ladies at the home have been using their influence to dissuade him, and his deacons are pleading with him to stay where he is. A subsequent letter, says the Weekly, brings the intelligence that Kawakatsu was baptized, and is now fully committed to the interests of the Baptist mission work in Japan. He is preaching every Lord's day, to increasing congregations, in the Baptist chapel at Yokohama.

—A Wesleyan missionary visiting Japan gives a few interesting facts with regard to the educational interests of that country. The university at Tokio is very thoroughly equipped, and has three hundred and forty-nine students, under careful discipline. The chief director, Hatti-Keyuma, was educated, converted and baptized in America. Several of the professors are Christian ministers, and, as far as the writer could learn, all the English and American gentlemen connected with the university and preparatory school were friendly to Christianity. The latter institution has six hundred pupils, who receive their lessons in the English language. The girls' normal school, which was recently opened by the Empress, occupies a fine building, and has all its arrangements closely copied from Western models. The superintendent, Mr. Nakamura, is a chief leader in the Canadian Wesleyan mission. He does not owe his position to the fact that he is a Christian, but was selected for the office on account of his great learning. He is one of the best Chinese scholars in Japan, and is also a master of English, from which he has translated Mill's treatise on "Liberty," and is now engaged on Butler's "Analogy." The new educational system of Japan was largely molded by Dr. Verbeck, of the Reformed mission, the first superintendent of the School of Foreign Languages in Tokio. It is estimated that the children in the various schools of Japan now number three millions. The pupils learning foreign languages, with special preference for the English, amount, perhaps, to fifty thousand.

SAFE.

Not on the mother's bosom,
Held by her clasping arm;
Not o'er the carpet tottering,
Guarded by her fond arm.

Not by her side, low kneeling,
Asking the Shepherd's care;
Not in the crib, sweet sleeping—
The wise bomb was not there.

Not with the father—playing,
Laughing with childish glee;
Not on his shoulder, shouting,
Not on the father's knee.

Up in the "beautiful city,"
Which hath "no need of the sun,"
Safe—on the Savior's bosom—
Reclaim the little one.

From Our Little Friends.

LIVE OAK WOOD, July 8, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: When I wrote to you before I promised to write to you again; but so many little girls and boys wrote to you that I do not think I have been missed much. But I thought I would write and tell you about our Sunday school. Mr. Weems is our superintendent. He lives on Coquille Island, five miles from here, and he walks every Saturday evening or Sunday morning all that distance to be with us on Sunday. He is an old bachelor, and a good man, and we all love him. We all go to his home every summer and have a picnic. We have splendid times. We can see the walls of Fort Pike, and schooners in Lake Pontchartrain. Nearly all of our scholars are members of the church. I joined last February. Mr. M. B. Sharbrough is our pastor, and preaches for us once a month. He always has a kind word for us little folks. In our Sunday school we have a missionary society. Members pay five cents when they join, and five cents a month afterward. We meet every first and third Sunday, and some one of the members reads a missionary address. We have a roll of honor, with all our names on it. Our pastor is an honorary member and supervisor of the society. We have a ladies' and children's prayer meeting every other Monday. At the last prayer meeting the little girls promised my ma to read a chapter in the Bible every day. I have read all of St. Mark. I want to ask the little girls and boys a Bible question: Who was it that lived on locusts and wild honey? They must find it themselves, and not ask any one to tell them. But, Mr. Editor, if you were looking over my shoulders you would say: "That is enough, little girl."

ALICE CARY SADLER.

A Tough Log, and How to Split It.

"Eh, dear! it's enough to take off one's finger ends—such a frost," said Jane Watson, raking the embers together. "Jack, what brings you by the fire? Up and get some wood; there's never a stick left, and I'm going to bake a barley cake."

"The wood's about gone till father fetches a load," said Jack, who liked the chimney corner better than the yard.

"Don't tell me; there's that log in the corner. We shall have no more till that's burnt, depend on it. Be off and chop some."

"Chop that!" said Jack. "Yes, a nice job. Why, if wants father to do it; and I don't believe he'd be very handy at it. Do you know how thick it is? And hard wood too and green besides!"

"It's no good bothering about it. If you're not quick I shall have the fire out. When once you get the wedge in it'll split easy enough," answered his mother. So Jack stretched himself, and moved slowly off with a grumble, by no means relishing his job.

"He's as stupid as he can be," said Jane, as she watched him from the window. "Just look, father, how he stands with his hands in his pockets, staring at the log. And now he's trying to chop off some bits of no consequence." And she went to the door and screamed out: "You'll never do any good that way; strike in, and get the wedge in, or I'll teach you something, you may be sure."

Then, turning to his grandfather, who sat quietly reading, she added: "He's aggravating; I can do no good with him, and don't believe I ever shall." The old man smiled.

"Oh, it's nothing to laugh about," she said sharply. "But sure I do all in my power to teach him and rule him, but it's waste work; I may scold and scold; it's not a bit of good."

"He's a tough log," said the old man.

"It's just what he is," she answered. "Ah," she continued, looking through the window, "he'll do it now; he's got the wedge in."

"Have you any eggs to spare, Mrs. Watson?" said a neighbor, coming in as she spoke. "Our fowls have done laying, and they have just sent down for a few from the hall."

"Why ever did you come out this cold day, when you've been so bad? Sure, you've plenty to send," said Jane.

"The children, you mean?" replied the neighbor. "The boys are out with their father, and Mary's at school, and Bessie is minding the baby. I thought I could get quicker through the snow than she would; and she's a famous nurse."

"I'm sure I don't know how you manage with so many. I know, to my cost, children are more plague than profit," said Jane, counting the eggs into the basket.

"I should be lost without mine," said the neighbor. "They don't give me any trouble but what can't be helped, poor things; and they always wish to do what's right, I believe."

"I wish, as you go through the yard, you'd tell Jack to bring what he's got, and be quick with it," said Jane, as the door closed after her. "I don't believe in the goodness of other people's children," she said with a sneer, and looked around at her father, who, closing his book, said gently: "I know how they manage it, Jane."

"How?" she asked.

"They follow your directions to Jack," he answered.

"My directions to Jack!" she said in surprise.

"Yes," said he, smiling again; "they get the wedge in."

"What are you driving at, father?" she asked peevishly.

"Why, don't you see; you are forever scolding and threatening and fault-finding with your children. Whenever you are out of sorts you begin to rate at them; and when they do wrong you are angry, not for their sakes, but for your own, and they can see that."

"What's that to do with a wedge?" she asked sullenly.

"Why, children's hearts may be likened to logs, Jane; and mostly they are like Jack's—very tough. The only way to manage them is to get into them by love; just as you said: Get the wedge in; and, when once in, work on it, and every stroke will tell. Make Jack feel that you want to cure him of his faults for his good; once get him to believe that, and you will see him improve; take my word for it. Scolding may make him do a little better for a little time, but will never do more. It's just like his chipping off bits with the ax. The wedge is the thing. I don't believe any heart is tough enough to hold against loving kindness. You try Jack's."

"Be patient and loving with him! Who can be patient with him when he's so obstinate?" said Jane.

"God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were sinners Christ died for us. Not because we love him, but because he loves us, we are saved, Jane. He must love us—put the wedge into our hearts by his Spirit before they will open to receive him, and return love to him; and as he does by us, so must we by one another."

Just at that moment Jack brought in the wood. "That's a good lad," said his mother, a little softened. "Bring in that bit of a wedge when you come with the rest of it."

"After all, when her temper was not ruffled, Jane had a mother's heart. These words set Jane thinking. Turning to her father, as the lad went out, she said: "You are right; and I hope I'll think of your words, father. I'll just hang up that wedge behind the door to mind me when I'm forgetting myself." And often, when her temper was tried by Jack's, she would give a look toward it, and say to herself: "The wedge; I mustn't forget the wedge."—Christian Intelligencer.

THE FAMISHED WANDERER.—A wanderer filled his traveling pouch with savory meats and fruits, as his way would lead him across the wide desert. During the first few days he journeyed through the smiling, fertile fields. But instead of plucking the fruits which nature here offered for the refreshment of the traveler he found it more convenient to eat of the provisions which he carried with him. He soon reached the desert. After journeying onward for a few days his whole store of food was exhausted. He now began to wail and lament, for nowhere sprouted a blade of grass; everything was covered with sand. After suffering, for two long days, the torments of hunger and thirst he expired.

"It was very foolish," said a youth, "to forget that he had to go across the desert."

"Do you act more wisely?" asked the teacher in an earnest tone. "You are setting forth on the journey of life—a journey that leads to eternity. Now is the time when you should seek after true knowledge, and collect the treasures of wisdom; but the labor all frights you, and you prefer to trifle away the spring-time of your years amid useless and childish pleasures. Continue to act thus, and you will yet, upon the journey of life, when wisdom and virtue fail you, fare like that needless wanderer. Make Christ your friend and teacher, listen to his voice, and prepare for your life-journey and the great eternity."

LAPLANDER BABIES AT CHURCH.—I want to tell you how the mammas away up in Lapland keep their babies from disturbing the minister on Sunday. Poor babies! I suppose it is growing bad style everywhere to take them out to church. And I suppose, too, the ministers are privately as thankful as they can be. But the Lapp mammas don't stay at home with theirs. The Lapps are a very religious people. They go immense distances to hear their pastors. Every missionary is sure of a large audience, and an attentive one. He can hear a pin drop—that is, should he choose to drop one himself—his congregation wouldn't make so much noise as that upon any consideration. All the babies are outside, buried in the snow. As soon as the family arrives at the little wooden church, and the reindeer is secured, the papa Lapp shovels a snug little bed in the snow, and mamma Lapp wraps baby snugly in skins and deposits it therein. Then papa piles the snow around it, and the dog is left to guard it, while the parents go decorously into church. Over twenty or thirty babies lie out there in the snow around the church, and I never have heard of one that suffocated or froze—smoke-dried little creatures, I suppose they are tough! But how would our soft, tender, pretty, pink-and-white babies like it, do you think?—Wide Awake.

There are some preachers who can manage to deliver a sermon and leave out Christ's name altogether. Surely the true believer will stand, like Mary Magdalene, over the sermon, and say: "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him."—Spurgeon.

The Camp Meeting Pulpit.

The preaching seems to be better, partly because of the novel surroundings and the zest which nature imparts to everything enjoyable. People, picnicing and on excursions, have an appetite which they had not at home, and they have a relish for plain fare in the woods and fields which they never feel at their own well-spread tables. These conditions may not be without their effect upon the spiritual appetite. A good supply of oxygen has much to do with the effect and enjoyableness of a sermon, and those who have to do with the ventilation of our churches will do well to bear it in mind. Air in motion is a type of the Holy Spirit, and it is generally the case, that where people are deprived of the one they are in no mood to receive the impressions of the other.

Fresh air is helpful to preacher and hearer. The preacher's thoughts and feelings partake of the purity and vitality of the atmosphere. The lungs are well filled, the brain is clear, the vocal chords are resonant, and the bodily vigor is toned up. The difference between being in a warm, close house, and in an open-air pulpit, is that of a bird in a narrow cage, and of a bird enjoying the largeness and freedom of field and forest. The camp meeting sermons have usually done service within doors. The preachers, we suppose, use their latest home discourses, but, with a liberty and power that astonishes themselves, as well as those who may have chanced to have heard them before.

The difference is greatly in the circumstances of the hearer. He has for a season left business and worldly cares behind him, and he gives himself up wholly, for a brief season, to religious duties. This one thing he does, forgetting the things which are behind, and pressing toward the mark for the prize. The incitement is intense and continuous. Almost every hour there are prayer and song and testimony, and the preachings follow so closely that the impressions of one service have not lost their glow before another begins. This in a measure accounts for the wonderful power of the camp meeting pulpit. It is a continuous and growing interest, that often reaches an almost overwhelming effect. So much so that the most lukewarm are revived, the most hardened are melted, and the most careless are arrested and converted. The uninterrupted blows of the smith will soon bring the iron to a welding heat, and keep it so until his end is reached. Blow upon blow, appeal upon appeal, prayer upon prayer, song upon song, and sermon upon sermon, are so much as no other means are. The iron kept steadily upon its object sets it in a blaze.

Personal effort of Christians, in leading their unconverted friends to seek God, is here at its best advantage. They have nothing else to do. The occasion warrants earnestness and boldness, and the unconverted, by their presence in such a place, invite the word of exhortation. The secret prayer and the private persuasion are among the unseen forces which contribute to the conversion of many souls.

The aspects of nature are in harmony with the great spiritual purpose. Few, probably, have failed to note how in conversion nature seems to respond to the inward light and joy. In the experience meetings we have marked this feature: that when the blessing came the sunlight was brighter, or the stars were more radiant, the trees and blossoms were more beautiful, and the waters were filled with glad voices, and agitated with a surprising delight. The pure in heart see God, and the vision is not only of the spiritual, but also of the material. With other means and conditions, nature also ministers to the soul, and every leaf and breeze and murmuring wavelet join in the melody of the heart.

So far as measures are concerned, there are none equal in power to the camp meetings. It is better than a hippodrome or a tabernacle with its accessories of organized singers, but still in the same line, that the multitude may be attracted, and that a religious interest may be awakened. To condemn one method is to condemn the other. The only objection to our camp meetings is that everybody cannot attend them. While reveling in the riches of the Seashore meeting, and listening to the preaching, we were made sad by the thought that many in the sweltering city, who would have so much enjoyed the occasion, were deprived of the privilege, and that thousands in the country, who would have been there if they could, were missing this feast of fat things.

Camp meetings are for the quickening of the churches, the conversion of sinners, and in every way for the furtherance of the gospel. The pulpit is lifted by them to its highest throne of power, and the preachers get in them a conception of their calling, and a baptism that is felt in their home ministry. Revived Christians and happy converts go from the blessings of this pulpit to tell what great things the Lord has done for them, and to scatter the fire that has been kindled. Who can estimate the results of a hundred and fifty souls converted, and a camp meeting baptism upon sixty preachers, and a thousand devoted men and women of God? These influences go out into many States, communities, churches and families, and the greater benefits are such as cannot be computed on the spot. These revived and blessed people go forth to sow, and the greater harvest is yet to be gathered. The angel reapers may begin soon, and their first sheaves are like translations from the grace of the camp to the glory within the vail; but it will be long before the last ripe sheaf shall be housed.

Offending the Spirit.

The Holy Spirit at this time especially seems to be moving with unwonted power upon the hearts of the people. We are now in the midst of special services throughout our borders, and the time of harvest is with us.

Our blessings and success are of God, and through the gift of the Spirit. The danger of offending the Spirit is greater when he is most graciously present. Let the Holy Ghost be honored in all our services by the preachers in depending upon his aid, by the church in praying for his baptism, and by all the people in yielding to his influence.

So sensitive, so jealous is the Holy Ghost, that this admonition was given in the earliest period of human history: "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." The Savior warns most solemnly and impressively: "But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation." Christians are warned against offending the Spirit: "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." So intimate are the relations of the Spirit to the soul in the work of redemption that he may be easily offended. Sinners are charged with resisting the Holy Ghost. It is a count against apostates that they have "done despite unto the Spirit of grace."

With what carefulness and seriousness, then, should we obey the voice of the Spirit, and avoid sinning against him? All classes are in danger of offending him in some way. No man can live in sin without resisting him. This is done every hour that we live in impenitence, and refuse to give our hearts to Christ. Believers grieve the Spirit by living beneath their privileges, by worldly-mindedness, by indulgence in evil tempers, and by uncharitableness. As a habit of religious thought and worship, we do not sufficiently recognize the personality and deity of the Spirit, and too seldom do we use the hymns that set forth his work and office. "Praying in the Holy Ghost" is a scriptural injunction. This is the effectual, fervent prayer. The inwrought prayer—of James.

The communion of the Holy Ghost is the privilege of believers and the condition of power—power in prayer, power in exhortation, and power in living example. The gospel, to be effectual, must be preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. If we live so as to grieve the Spirit, if we grieve him in our very worship, and in our preaching, we cannot expect his aid.

Without dwelling upon the importance of seeking the baptism of the Spirit, we would direct attention simply to this: the danger of offending him. He is driven from our homes, our hearts and our assemblies by the irreverence and unbelief with which he is treated. If we will cease to offend him, the way for his outpouring upon us is already largely secured. Christians cannot be too watchful here. If they are without comfort, without assurance, without peace, the presumption is that they have grieved the Spirit. He will come to the heart if we will let him; and he will stay, unless rudely and irreverently treated.

In our prayers and sermons he is sometimes spoken of as a menial and as a commodity rather than as God. In our words and thoughts let us be more careful; and in our most secret feelings and desires let us not lose the awe that such a presence should inspire. With the Father and the Son, let us also honor and adore the Spirit.

The Southern University.

The Alabama Conference, at its last session, passed some resolutions about soliciting a centennial offering to religious education, which, when collected, should be used as an endowment of the Southern University. It also passed a request of the board of trustees for the appointment of an agent to look after this and other interests of the college; but the Bishop, either overlooking it, or misunderstanding the nature of the agency, or failing to find a man, did not make the appointment. Then the board, at its annual session in Greensboro, appointed the writer to supply in some sort this agency, with the understanding, however, that in doing this work he was not to neglect his pastoral charge. I can think of no better way of getting about the work than through the ADVOCATE, and so must beg of Mr. Editor the privilege of an occasional communication. And, after all, I am not sure that this is not the very best way. The Southern Christian Advocate has frequent notices of Emory College, and everybody knows that the Nashville devotes a very large space to "Vanderbiltiana," which embraces everything concerning that school, from the princely donations of the generous founder to the birth of a baby in a professor's family. In this way these institutions are kept before the public in the church papers; and it is nothing but right. Now will the editor of the NEW ORLEANS permit us to do the same thing for our extreme Southern colleges? I say our extreme Southern colleges; for, beginning at Wofford in South Carolina, and taking in Emory in Georgia, the Southern University in Alabama, Centenary in Louisiana, and winding up with the college in Texas, we find them all encompassed with the same peculiar dangers and difficulties; and hence what is said of one may, in the main, be said of all.

Now, the first thing I wish to do is to remind the brethren that we have a post in this cordon of defense which seems to have been laid out and established with more than the skill of military science; and that duty to the entire Southern Methodist Church, as well as to that part of it included in our boundary lines, binds us most solemnly to strengthen and hold this post. By we I mean the preachers and laymen of the Alabama Conference; for the Southern University is ours—built by the enterprise and money of our people, managed by the appointees of our Conference, committed by Providence to our guardianship—just as much ours as any district, circuit or station, and far more vital to all the interests of the church, general or local, than any other appointment we have. That it is ours, of course, all the preachers know; and yet perhaps all of us do not feel the full force of the obligation growing out of this fact. But that we have a college located within our boundaries is not known to all of our members; for a great many are added to the church every year who are unacquainted with our work, and a great many others take no interest in higher education till their children are ready to go away to school, and are, consequently, uninformed on this subject. If they have known they have forgotten. The suggestion I wish to make at this point is this: that the preachers take special pains to give this information. This month and the next is a most opportune time to do so, for in these two months camp meetings and district meetings will bring nearly all our people together in large masses. Let the announcement be made from the pulpit that the college is well organized, under a full, able and experienced faculty; that the expenses of a young man need not exceed $200 per session of nine months; that the college will open promptly in October; that Greensboro is about three hours' ride by rail from Selma, and, as statistics show, has proven to be as healthy a college site as any in the land, North or South. And let private conversations be solicited with young men thinking of going off, and with parents and guardians who are thinking of sending the young men off. Let this be done at one or two of the most popular hours of the meeting by the presiding elder or some other leading man, and the people be urged in a short address, by every reason that bears on the subject, to send their sons to college, as well as to the primary schools. A few words will decide many a man to invest some of his money in the brains of his son, and cause many a son greatly to desire such investment. Now surely this can be done, and it will be a very great work at a very small cost. No preacher need hesitate on this matter, for the church needs for its permanent prosperity men of collegiate training, no less than such as can only read and write; and if a meeting can be hurt by an appeal on education or missions, we may feel sure it is on a false foundation, and had as well be broken up and started over. Respectfully,

J. W. RUSH.

The Political Woman.

Samuel G. Smith, in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, under the heading of "The Political Woman Ethically Considered," says some sensible things. We extract as follows:

The only direct argument in favor of woman's suffrage has been ethical, and upon this branch of the case this paper briefly will treat. It is claimed that temperance and other political moral questions would be safer were the ballot placed in the hands of woman. And then we are eagerly asked: "Don't you think your wife or your mother knows as much as a nigger or a drunken Irishman?"—the excited questioner never thinking that the parties aforesaid are also blessed with those inestimable treasures—wives and mothers. It may not be out of place to consider the moral aspect of this matter in a somewhat broader way. Men and women are born into the world morally alike. Man is stronger physically; he is different mentally; but morally he occupies a like position with his sister. Both enter life with the same innocence, the same sin-taint, having hope, through a common Savior, of one heaven after death. Woman, then, is innately just as good and no better than man, or else God has made a terrible mistake in his moral government, and is manifestly unjust to one or both of the sexes. Upon this point there will probably be no question. While it is true that woman is no better than man, it is equally undeniable that women are better than men. Women are more numerous and more active in the churches, more energetic in benevolent enterprises, and in private life, as individuals, are able to present a higher purity of habits and character. And yet let it be distinctly remembered that this difference cannot be innate, and belongs to women as individuals, and not to woman as a sex. But so universal is this fact that women have become the recognized conservators of morals, the tittest trainers of childhood, and the wife is the good angel of man's destiny. This truth gathers vigor from the fact that it has been true so long; and by the laws of heredity, very early and very strongly do the moral sentiments manifest themselves in girlhood. And here comes the force of the entire argument: If women be better than men, and yet be not so by nature, it must follow that this superiority is developed by her favorable position in the social and political world, and therefore the ethical argument in favor of woman's suffrage becomes self-destructive; since this purity of woman which it is proposed to make the basis of the new regime is only possible in the absence of that regime, and is the legitimate fruit of the present system.

Nor is this only an a priori argument. Dr. Van Work has established in his articles, recently published in the Popular Science Review, the "Relation of Woman to Crime." By a large deduction drawn from the criminal statistics of both England and France, he shows that in the class of crimes to which woman is more strongly tempted than man, including infanticide and the like, she is more guilty. Seclusion from temptation, then, seems to be the plain reason for woman's purity; and that not only in individual cases, but, continued through so many generations, it has become a tendency of the sex. The preservation of religion seems to have always demanded a non-secular priesthood, and the morals of society may depend quite largely on the conservative relation of woman. Manifestly the complete revolution of the social order which has been prevalent through all nations for six thousand years ought not to be undertaken without the most cogent reasons, and the most indubitable proofs of consequent good. Festina lente is a wise maxim. Paul has some very clear statements of these questions, however much even the church may deride or defy them. And it is possible that we may find them based upon the profoundest as well as the most advanced philosophy, like some other truths of the Bible toward which the world is even now progressing. It seems clear, at least, that "Adam was first formed, and then Eve."

Union Meetings.

It is well for the different denominations to unite occasionally in Christian enterprises, and on occasion to worship together. But the greatest good for the conversion of souls, and bringing them into healthful membership in the visible church, is not accomplished by union services. The differences in doctrines and methods may not be very essential, but they are sufficient to hamper and embarrass. As a rule, they do not build up any church greatly, and much of the fruit is lost because it cannot be gathered and secured at once. Let us have the communion of saints, and let the unity of the Spirit be maintained, while at the same time each denomination holds its own meetings, works its own peculiar measures, and preaches its own distinctive doctrines. At the Methodist Preachers' Meeting of New York city the subject of union meetings was recently discussed. From the Herald's report we extract as follows:

Messrs. Lloyd, Corbitt, Dickinson, Harrower and others discussed the relative value of union evangelistic work and denominational work, and they came to the conclusion that the latter is the best. Taking Messrs. Moody and Sankey as the best exponents of the former, Mr. Lloyd remarked that the results, so far as his inquiry and observation could obtain them, were not favorable to union efforts. He was not able to trace more than two hundred and fifty Hippodrome converts who had united with any church here. It has been reported that the Rev. Dr. Tyng, Jr., had received three hundred into his church from those meetings; but Dr. Tyng had told him (Mr. Lloyd) a short time ago that he had received only thirty-five who could be traced to those meetings. This aggregate Mr. Lloyd considered a very small result for the expenditure of $50,000 and ten weeks' time of ten thousand people, concentrated in three services daily. The success of the Gospel Tent services centers around Dr. Tyng, Jr., and that accounts for a few nights ago, when seventy-five stood up for prayers and forty were converted. Union efforts are comparative failures. Mr. Corbitt subsequently styled them "grand ecclesiastical farces," and Mr. Dickinson thought the converts were a sort of jelly-fish without theological backbone, and therefore of small account to any church that they might join. And, indeed, they did not care to unite with any denomination, but preferred to float around among all. For six months the churches of the Ninth Ward have had union services, with an average attendance on Sunday afternoon of two thousand, and the result, he believed, would not exceed thirty-six converts. Mr. Harrower agreed in the number of converts, but thought the average attendance was placed too high—that nine hundred would be nearer right.

Centenary College.

After more than twenty years I am once more at Centenary College. It was here that I learned to love two young men of firm principles and earnest consecration to all that is good. They were then pastors of churches in New Orleans. They are now Bishops of the church. It was here I met and admired William Winans, the profound divine and deep thinker. He was then president of the joint board, and ably did he preside over their deliberations. And it was here that I first knew Benjamin Drake—a man of the finest presence and sweetest spirit. Others, too, I knew, and honored and loved; but most of them are gone.

Of the very first class of 1850, to whom I gave the diplomas, the youngest is now the president of the college. Time has intermingled his locks with gray, but he still stands more than six feet, and his erect form is not in the least bent with the addition of twenty-six years. He presides over the college with dignity, and commands the respect of both students and patrons. He is a most energetic and faithful worker, and performs with great ease the labors of two men, for he is both pastor and president. His baccalaureate was well conceived and splendidly delivered. It abounded in rare classical allusions, in noble Christian sentiments, and in excellent and wise counsels. I am glad to say that Dr. Andrews will continue at the head of the institution. The students acquitted themselves well. This may be said of both departments, and of all that appeared upon the rostrum. The buildings, which cost $175,000, give an imposing front of six hundred feet. The grounds are magnificent, and are thickly studded with pine, beech and magnolia—the natural growth of the forest. The friends of the college came in great numbers, and the throng at commencement did not intimate the least relaxation of interest in the college.

The meeting of the alumni was of unusual interest. They were briefly addressed by the Hon. and Rev. James H. Mussey, who was a pupil here fifty years ago. The address to this now venerable body was to be delivered by the Hon. Walker Spencer, who, being at his post in Congress, could not be present. Dr. Mussey was therefore called into service, and delivered an admirable address on Ideal Art Music. I do not suppose that the doctor was ever more felicitous, either in matter or manner.

I am sorry to say that the college is really struggling for existence. It has no endowment, and its patronage is much reduced, affording a meager support for an overworked faculty.

Bishop Keener, who is president of the board, is devoting his energies to sustaining the institution. He says that Centenary must live, that he will take his horse and buggy and solicit donations, and awaken deeper interest, and get up an endowment sufficient to assure the continued existence and increased prosperity of the college. I hope he may have success. He deserves it, and the college must be sustained. All the magnificent property belongs to the church, and the church in Louisiana and Mississippi must see to it that it pass not from their hands.

Lottery Gambling.

The law referred to would be more complete if it excluded from the mails all newspapers in which lottery advertisements are published. The Louisiana Lottery Company is doing more mischief than can be estimated, and the secular press seems to be altogether subsidized to promote its baneful ends. Now and then the Sunday dailies admit an entire page, and constantly columns are devoted to this iniquitous institution. The Richmond Christian Advocate, speaking of the law of Congress excluding letters and circulars concerning lotteries from the mails, says:

"Lottery gambling in all its various forms has grown to be so enormous an evil in this country that the attention of the United States Congress has been directed to it, and a bill has passed both houses and will no doubt be signed by the President, totally suppressing this wicked business. If such a law had been passed fifty years ago many a man would have been saved from ruin. But we are thankful that we have it even at this late day. Nothing has so carefully fostered and so fully developed the spirit of gambling as the gift enterprises, and kindred schemes by which the people are cheated out of their money. And the evil falls upon that very class that our laws should be careful to protect against sharpers and thieves—the poor, hard-working people, who are lured by the prospect of speedy and easy gains into the nets spread for them. The following is the law, and we hope it will be faithfully enforced all over the country:

"No letter or circular concerning lotteries, so-called gift concerts, or other similar enterprises offering prizes, or concerning schemes devised and intended to deceive and defraud the public for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretenses, shall be carried in the mail. Any person who shall knowingly deposit anything to be carried by mail in violation of this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars nor less than one hundred dollars, with costs of prosecution."

FEMALE EPISCOPAL VOTES.—The Southern Churchman says on the subject of female voting:

"A debate took place in the California Convention, and more in the North Carolina Convention, about giving women the right to vote in the election of vestries, and neither of them would listen to it.

"There was a debate fifteen or twenty years ago in the Virginia Council on the same subject. The writer of this was opposed to women voting. 'They would vote,' so he told the Virginia Convention, 'only when there was excitement.' But in the convention there was a gallant young layman who was not to be put off with such arguments; he took the floor and showed that Christian women in the parishes did most of the good, and without them many a parish would go down. So the convention refused to alter the canon on the subject, kept it just as it was, not specifying the sex that could vote, but allowing both sexes to do as much voting as they pleased. And thus it continues to this day, and we are glad of it; and so our Christian women in Virginia can go to church on Easter Monday and vote with the best of the men. We have heard of no difficulty thus far, and we fancy there will be none. So let North Carolina and California give permission with gladness for women to vote, and in all likelihood the churches will have better and wiser vestries than ever."

Rev. S. P. Richardson, presiding elder of the Union Springs district, Alabama Conference, writing July 31, says:

"There is a gracious revival influence pervading the entire district, except on one or two works, and we hope the holy fire will quench them. Our District Conference was a full success. The outlook is brighter than at any time in the past four years. Crops are good all over the district. Earth and Heaven are blessing the people. We hope the church will show her love and gratitude by meeting all the claims of the church. We have organized another high school, under the supervision of the Quarterly Conference, at Hopewell church, Bullock county, with very favorable prospects. Bro. Wade, the pastor of Union circuit, is doing a fine work, both for the church and education."

BISHOP MARVIN.—The Pacific Methodist of July 14 says: "A note from the Bishop intimates that he will leave San Francisco for China immediately after the session of the Los Angeles Conference, perhaps by the steamer of November 1. We understand that it is his intention to make the grand tour, passing through India to the Holy Land, and around the world. He will have for his companion the Rev. E. E. Hendrix, pastor of St. Joseph, Mo."

Of all the riches that we brag of, all the pleasures we enjoy, we can carry no more out of this world than out of a dream.—Bonnell.

The correspondence of M. Doudan, recently published in two large volumes in Paris, has many sharp criticisms of men who have made a noise in these times. His estimate of Renan is none the less true than it is unfavorable:

M. Renan is a great coquette in the order of the theologians and of the savants. His coquetting is mixed with impertinence, but he gives the men of his generation what they desire in everything—sugar-plums which smell of the infinite. He is like some chemists who have turned cod liver oil into a very agreeable beverage; only the active principles of the cod liver are gone; and the children remain as lymphatic as they were before. When I read him I sometimes get angry at the thought that he can make me take what he says for real reasoning. Music has this superiority over the other arts, and even over literature: it still says something to the soul when words expire, as it were; but, on the other hand, it has this inherent defect: it is perforce vague, it is half physical and half moral. Well, our time is excessively fond of this mixture of physical and moral; it wishes to be moved rather than to reflect; to be rocked in music, forward, backward, without ever advancing, and without using its will. Renan gives his readers this rocking sensation, with his dreamy style, which is soft, insinuating, which handles the difficulties without much pressing them, like small serpents. If is music—the kind of music which Plato did not admit for the education of youth. At the sound of this music, we resign ourselves to be amused with everything, we support despotism while we dream of liberty; we forget to move our oars, and we are led down the insensible current of the waters, thinking agreeably of the energetic souls who once changed the world and made it better, "because," says M. Renan in his insolent pride, "these souls were narrow, and did not understand the complexity of the world."

NAMES OF COUNTRIES.—The following countries, it is said, were originally named by the Phœnicians, the greatest commercial people in the world. The names, in the Phœnician language, signify something characteristic of the places which they designate. Europe signifies a country of white complexion, so named because the inhabitants were of a lighter complexion than those of Asia and Africa. Asia signifies between, or in the middle, from the fact that geographers placed it between Europe and Africa. Africa signifies the land of corn or ears. It was celebrated for its abundance of corn, and all sorts of grain. Siberia signifies thirsty or dry—very characteristic. Spain, a country of rabbits or conies. It was once so infested with these animals that they sued Augustus for an army to destroy them. Italy, a country of pitch, from its yielding great quantities of black pitch. Calabria also for the same reason. Gaul (modern France) signifies yellow-haired, as yellow hair characterized its inhabitants. The English of Caledonia is a high hill. This was a rugged, mountainous province in Scotland. Hibernia, utmost, or last habitation; for beyond this, westward, the Phœnicians never extended their voyages. Britain, the country of tin, great quantities being found on it and adjacent islands. The Greeks called it Albion, which signifies in the Phœnician tongue either white or high mountains, from the whiteness of its shores, or the high rocks on the western coast. Corsica signifies a woody place. Sardinia signifies the footsteps of men, which it resembles. Syracuse signifies bad savor, so called from the unwholesome marsh on which it stood. Rhodes, serpents or dragons, which it produced in abundance. Sicily, the country of grapes. Scylla, the whirlpool of destruction. Charybdis, the holds of destruction. Etna signifies a furnace, or dark or smoky.

Every one who has been in France will appreciate the criticisms of Bismarck, in a letter written from Paris in 1855, when he was sent to thank the Emperor for admitting Prussia to the Congress of Paris. He describes his lodgings as follows: "I inhabit a floor in a hotel where there are five fireplaces, yet I am always frozen. The five clocks on my mantelpieces tick continually, but they never show the right time. The walls are lined with splendid mirrors, yet they never enable me to tie my cravat decently. This is France, which we have been taught to suppose leads the march of civilization."

At a sale of autograph letters in London recently thirty-three letters of John Wesley brought $350; thirteen of his brother Charles, $117; four of Geo. Whitefield's, $21; and one of Dr. Doddridge's about $11. A four-page letter of Robert Burns was sold for $100, and one of Edmund Kean for $22.

Why is "naming the day" for the wedding like a naval battle? Because it's a marry-time engagement.

AMID the many gourmet egg-stories we most delight and wish what profusion the sales rays are scattered on the earth, dropping and dazzling every object seen by the student of nature. But pre-eminently Old Sol "casts the gospel light" as race and lights fall to finding for us the noble clouds, and their artist the demand for a representative. What, after all, be? Many are the substitutes man has tried, from pine knots and tallow dips candles to oils of various kinds. Ancient city gas engineers burned olive oil very good, then whale oil, but now we have the vast supplies in the Brooklyn Oil prepared by the Portoline and Portable Gaslight Company of our city. It gives a clear, brilliant light, one lamp with equal power and efficiency, being equal to sixteen candles, and at a cost proving it to be decidedly economical; and to this we add the fact of its absolute safety, for it has been carefully examined by our leading chemist Dr. Crawcour, and tried by him for two years. Other eminent chemists have also analyzed it and pronounced it "perfectly safe"; several friends in the country speak of it in high terms. The presidents and agents of our insurance companies endorse it fully as a safe illuminating oil, which, if used in preference to the recommended oil, would diminish the number of fires caused by the explosion of coal oil lamps, and save valuable lives. Hence we unhesitatingly recommend the use of the Brooklyn Oil, instead of other coal oils, to all who regard the lives of their families. This company also have a large stock of other oils, as the necessities of coal oil lamps, chimneys, shades, burners, wicks, cans etc., which they offer at low prices. For further facts we refer to their advertisement in this paper.

Offer to the trade, at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES, the following list of, their superior and popular brands:

INSURANCE OIL.

The Insurance Oil is the best Family Safety Oil, and is urgently recommended by all our Insurance Companies as a substitute for common Coal Oil or Kerosene. It may be used in ordinary lamps

Without Change of Burner.

THE NEW ORLEANS BOARD OF UNDERWRITERS SAY

"It is our opinion that the general use of the Insurance Oil would greatly reduce the number of lamp fires and explosions, and lessen the risk of destruction of life and property".

A burning Cap Pole, or ignited by a lamp, and the fire has been so reduced as to place it within the reach of all classes of consumers, and make it the GREAT FAMILY SAFETY OIL.

As an Illuminating Oil for family use, or for general use in ordinary Kerosene or Coal Oil lamps, the Insurance Oil has the confidence of the New Orleans Board of Trade, the Fire Commissioners, and all the American and European Insurance Agencies, as PERFECTLY SAFE.

Refined Carbon or Coal Oil.

THE WELL-KNOWN CROWN BRAND—This is a light, high fire test Kerosene or Coal Oil, generally known as the Crown Oil, and recommended to the trade, and to consumers, as the best, CHEAPEST, as the best and safest of all the LOW-PRICED ILLUMINATING OILS in market. In five years' use it has not needed trouble, nor has ever a carried. The Portoline and Portable Gas Light Company have the exclusive agency of the Crown Oil for the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas.

PUROLINE FLUID.

For Safety, Cleanliness, Durability, Cheapness, Brilliancy and Purity, this article stands unrivaled. It is the best Fluid ever offered to the public. Manufactured only by the Portoline and Portable Gas Light Company, and for sale by all the Agents.

This celebrated Fluid, prepared by a process known only to the proprietors, is the best and most reliable of all the products of Petroleum for use in Metallic Portable Gas Lamps and Lanterns. It burns clear and brilliant, is free from smoke or unpleasant odor, and does not clog the wick or gum the burner. No other fluid or oil should be used in Portable Gas Lamps or Lanterns.

Portoline is especially recommended for use in Portable Gas Lamps and Chandeliers, in Street Lanterns, Stable Lamps, Cane Shed Lanterns, and in Engine and Gas Burners for Steamboat Landings. Merchants, Factories and Street Processions can get a light equal to the best city Coal Gas, reminding the people of the remotest villages to illuminate their Stores, Warehouses, Saloons, Halls, Churches, Streets and Gardens as brilliantly as the favored residents of a great metropolis.

A STRING OF PEARLS!

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1872:

I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies.

Hon. Alex. H. Stephens has greatly improved in health of late.—The State Line Press, West Point, Ga.

Testimony of the Chief Justice of Georgia.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for constipation of my bowels, caused by a temporary derangement of the liver, for the last three or four years, and always, when used according to the directions, with decided benefit. I think it is a good tonic for the derangement of the liver—at least such has been my personal experience in the use of it.—Hiram Warner, Chief Justice of Georgia.

Opinion of the Clergy.

Simmons' Liver Regulator is certainly a specific for that class of complaints which it claims to cure. Many of our fellow-beings are suffering from hepatic disorders, and have doubts in reation to the efficacy of this popular preparation. We can only offer them the simple and candid argument of Philip to Nathaniel: "Come and see." Try the proposed remedy, and then you can judge for yourselves.—Rev. David Wills, Pastor of Presbyterian Church, Macon, Ga.

Always Keep It On Hand.

I have used Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator myself, and in my family for years, and pronounce it one of the most satisfactory medicines that can be used. Nothing would induce me to be without it, and I recommend all my friends, if they want to secure health, to always keep it on hand.—Rev. Wells Champion, Col., Congregationalist.

Send for descriptive circulars.

Eagle Cotton Gins.

Improved Eagle Cotton Gins.

PRICES REDUCED.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best-built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the mules and planters who see the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the original has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the numerous number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only ten-inch cylinders, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in large sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best to use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

The bale of cotton which received the grand prize at St. Louis mill has won so many thousands of dollars at numerous fairs, was ginned on the Eagle Cotton Gin.

Prices Have Been Greatly Reduced.

Brahma Chickens.

Mr. Editor: I will give you my little experience in the raising and management of the pure Light Brahmas in Mississippi. I can very safely claim the Light Brahmas to be the best chickens for every purpose that can be raised in the South. They bear confinement well, and are easily confined. A three-foot fence will turn them ordinarily. They are good winter and summer layers, laying large, nice eggs, weighing ordinarily seven to the pound. They mature early, and can be raised wherever other breeds can be raised, and here from January to December. They require no more feed than the common chickens, and if they did they pay better for their feed. I have ninety-one chicks now, all in fine health and condition. Thirty-four of these were hatched in March and April, and twenty-four last week. I prefer chicks hatched in March and April here, for then they have a greater natural variety of feed in worms, insects, and nice, tender grass, which makes them more thrifty and healthy.

My early chicks, now four months old, are larger than common chickens when grown, and by fall will be fine birds, looking more like turkeys than chickens.

In raising chickens I never feed whole corn, only to setting hens, and I do this once a day regularly. I feed chicks, when first taken off, with hard-boiled egg, corn meal and wheat bran scalded, three or four times a day for a time, then three times a day, then once a day on this feed and once a day on oats or cracked corn, the first early and the latter late in the day. I furnish my chickens at all times with plenty of fresh water, even those just taken off, for chickens drink a great deal, and it should always be pure and fresh. I feed cabbage and vegetables, cut up fine, to old and young, whenever I think they need them. Change their feed, but never feed too much of any thing if you want healthy fowls. There is a great want, in our Southern country, of care and attention to our poultry. Let us as a people get out of this loose way of doing business, and let us have plenty of nice eggs, and nice, large chicks, to furnish our wives and children, and a surplus for our city friends, who have not the facilities for raising poultry.

J. M. Simmons, M. D.

Lauderdale, Miss., July 16, 1876.

Preserving Grapes.—In our notice in reference to the preservation of grapes, in our last issue, we located the gentleman who did the preserving—Mr. Geisendorffer—in Placerville. We have since been informed that he is a resident of New England Mills, in this county, and that he is an extensive grape-grower. One of our cotemporaries gives the following as the process adopted:

The grapes are picked when thoroughly ripe by cutting a short piece of the wood, to which the stem is attached, out of the cane on which it grew. Care is taken not to handle any of the berries so as to destroy the bloom of the grapes, or in any way bruise them. All imperfect or bruised grapes are cut from the stem with a sharp and pointed pair of shears, and the bunches are ready for packing. The boxes are so shallow that two layers of bunches will fill them, and the material used in packing is old pine sawdust, that has lain in a heap for a number of years, and has gone through a sweating or heating process, and lost all its aromatic or piny nature. A layer of sawdust of the description above stated, and well sun-dried, is then spread on the bottom of the box about an inch thick. On this is then laid a layer of bunches of grapes in such a manner that they touch or lay on each other as little as possible, and not allowing any to touch the side of the box. Then another layer of sawdust is covered over these about the same thickness, not allowing any of the grapes to protrude above the sawdust. The boxes are then covered and nailed up tight, and set away in a dry but cool place, and not opened until wanted for use.—Placer (Cal.) Argus.

How to Stop Bleeding at the Nose:—There are many remedies recommended, such as putting a large key down the patient's back, and so on; but the most effectual, based on scientific principles, is so effectual as to be infallible. The entire blood supply of the face comes from two little arteries, each supplying one side of the face, and each passes over the outside of the jaw bone, about two-thirds of the way back from the chin to the angle of the jaw under the ear. These arteries can be found by the finger, and in the case of bleeding at the nose can be pressed against the jaw bone, thus stopping the flow of blood from the nostrils. One of the arteries supplies the right nostril and the other the left. It can therefore be easily determined on which side to apply the pressure, which should be continued long enough to allow of contraction in the finer arteries of the nose.—Boston Journal.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP

Nearly half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, and its well-established virtues and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Throat are well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it must be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Lungs, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Gout or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on consumption, it has been found most efficacious, preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of effecting extraordinary medicines, free from all compounds of the same nature, the [illegible] and that, owing to its agreeable flavor, can be administered without the least difficulty to children, it requires no particular diet. It is a sure test, not only because the bottle contains more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without losing, and it can be used in families where only occasionally keeping the bottle would expire.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Adults can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night can take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup, going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a night's rest.

Children from three to five years of age, from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three or four hours. For sale by

A. CARROUCHE,
Agent for New Orleans, 32 Chartres street.
And by all druggists.

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER!

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turner's Hair Tint,

HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the highest encomiums of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind.

No washing or preparation of the hair necessary before using.

It is free from all Deleterious Ingredients, such as Lead, Sulphur or other compounds which are injurious to the Hair or Personnel by Absorption.

And its use saves both time and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb, once a month or oftener, to the Hair or Whiskers, restores the [illegible] to its natural color being so perfectly assimilated as to defy detection. Its great recommendation is the production of the, producing any desired shade from light brown to the deepest black, and the total absence of that dry and burned appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery is easily applied to a single hair, or spots that have been [illegible] can be restored to their original shade without coloring all over the head, as is necessary in using other Hair Dyes.

Opinions of New Orleans Booksellers.

It is a book which has long been wanted and often called for. Such selling copies daily that are wanted by all parts of the world. GEORGE ELLIS, Bookseller, Opposite the Postoffice.

During my closing experience as a bookseller in this city I have had thousands of inquiries for such a work. Mr. Dennett's LOUISIANA AS IT IS is precisely the book that has been called for. It gives general satisfaction to my patrons in the city and country. It is a true character were generally known it would require ten times the present edition of 10,000 copies to supply the demand. C. C. HALEY, Bookseller, 134 Commercial Place, Branch, 151 Poydras street.

An experience of twenty-five years as bookseller in New Orleans will justify me in saying that the book just issued by Mr. Daniel Dennett, LOUISIANA AS IT IS, supplies a want long felt by residents and strangers. The demand for the book is active, and is steadily increasing. JAMES A. GRESHAM, 92 Camp and 118 Canal street.

Dealers in the city and country can obtain supplies of the above book at the wholesale establishment of ROBERT J. HARP, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE BALANCED SCREW COTTON PRESS.

THIS is the most valuable improvement ever made upon the Screw Cotton Press. It betters all their good qualities, and adds thereto rapidity and ease of operation.

The improvement consists in having the nut in two parts. The nut is opened and closed upon the screw by means of a lever. With the nut open, the screw and follower are let down upon the cotton; then the nut is closed and the pressing is done in the usual manner. Then upon the nut, and raise up the screw and follower (instead of screwing it up) thus raising and lowering the screw, by means of the counterbalance, saves repeatedly the press at least sixty times, reducing the time and labor of pressing cotton one half.

This Press has taken the premium over all competitors at the recent State Fairs of Mississippi and Louisiana.

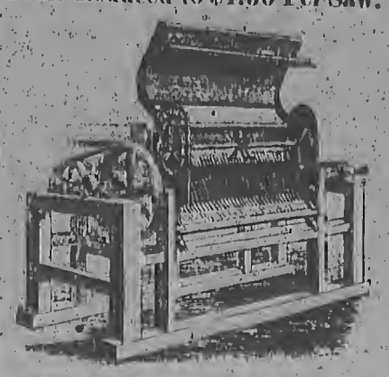
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED "Revolving Head" Cotton Gin. PATENTED JULY 16, 1872. Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons, and several recent improvements have been added, it obviates all friction at the end of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the Same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while consuming steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing ration on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 10 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

New Orleans Markets.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Tuesday, August 8, 1876.

MONETARY.

Business relations seem quite satisfactory, except here and there a growler disturbs the equilibrium of a bank or insurance parlor; but this class have to be borne with. Rates of interest are fair and regular. Prices of stocks and bonds change but little. City premium bonds have declined to 31. Owing to large offerings, State consols are also two per cent. lower—on account of large amounts being funded. No change in prices of bank, railroad or insurance stocks.

GENERAL MARKET.

The general market during the past week has shown more life than usual at this season of the year. Several merchants on Canal street speak of a good business doing. Strangers are here making some purchases, which is encouraging. Confidence is growing daily, and our country merchants and planters need doubt no longer, but come and try our market. We notice calico offered at retail for five cents, and some as low as four cents per yard; domestics also at five cents. Other goods can be bought in proportion. Hardware, tinware and stoves are low; also boots, shoes, hats, clothing and stationery.

COTTON.

By reference to the following tables it will be seen that the staple has been much sought after; the market being firm and active, with light offerings, during the week. Factors on Friday advanced the prices an ⅛c. for low ordinary and ordinary; on Saturday ⅛c. all round, on Monday ⅛c., and again an ⅛c. on Tuesday, making ⅜c. on low grades and ⅛c. on better classes for the past six days.

Special Notices.

THE SCHOOL FOR BOYS.—Rev. F. M. Grace, A. M., once a professor in the East Tennessee University, and afterward president of Hiwassee College, puts into his paper, the Iron Age, Birmingham, the following notice:

"Hiwassee College closed its annual exercises May 25. We learn from the biennial catalogue that the number of students was one hundred and eighty-six, many of them from Alabama and other gulf States. There is no better school in the world for a boy than Hiwassee." Address President John H. Brunner, Hiwassee College, East Tennessee."

VOL. 22. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, AUGUST 17, 1876. NO. 33.

A MORNING SONG.

I wake this morn, and all my life
Is freshly mine to live;
The future with sweet promise rife,
And crowns of joy to give.

New words to speak, new thoughts to hear,
New love to give and take;
Perchance new burdens I may bear,
For love's own sweetest sake.

New hopes to open in the sun,
New efforts worth the will,
Of tasks with yesterday begun
More bravely to fulfill.

Fresh seeds for all the time to be
Are in my hands to sow,
Whereby, for others and for me,
Undreamed-of fruit may grow.

In each white daisy mid the grass
That turns my foot aside,
In each uncurling fern I pass,
Some sweetest joy may hide.

And if, when eventide shall falls
In shade across my way,
It seems that naught my thoughts recall
But life of every day;

Yet if each step in shine or shower
Be where thy footstep trod,
Then dost be every happy hour
That leads me nearer God.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The Times today, in a leading article on the text that the capture of Gurgusovatz is a severe if not fatal blow to the Servians, concludes as follows: The Turkish ministers must be solemnly warned that they will not be allowed to make wanton use of their victory. If they think that on the soil of Servia their troops may safely commit the one-hundredth part of the atrocities perpetrated in Bulgaria, then they are victims of infatuation. Servia is not hid away in a corner. What is done there one day is known the next morning in all the capitals of Europe; and if Bashi Bazouks were let loose on the defenseless peasantry, the prudential moves of statesmen would form but a sorry barrier against the popular indignation of the countries on whose forbearance the Turks have too long relied. Even the repudiation of the Turkish debt did less to give a just idea of Ottoman rule than the butcheries in Bulgaria, and a repetition of those horrors in Servia would make the picture of that rule fatally complete. Nor will Turkey be allowed to make such use of her victory as to cancel Servian freedom. Servia is under the protection of the great powers, and with them will lie the duty of imposing any needful restraints on the impetuous spirit of her people. Whatever may be their faults, they are advancing in civilization as fast as the Ottoman part of Turkey is decaying. Other States than Russia would not be disposed to let them again fall under the rule of Turkish Pachas, or even allow Belgrade to be occupied by a Turkish garrison.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The Standard's Berlin special says: The Porte has positively declared that he is willing to negotiate for peace whenever the powers are disposed to intervene, but is not willing to agree to an armistice before the entry of the Turks into Belgrade.

The News has a dispatch from Belgrade which says that the foils are closing around Servia. Abdul Kerim Pasha is pushing westward from Gurgusovatz, and the Servian Gen. Horvatovich has fallen back on Yanekovo and Kilsura. Hard fighting commenced at Yanekovo on Wednesday, and is still continuing. If the Turks carry Yanekovo there will be no important obstacle in their way to Banja. The army of the south is faring badly, and has retreated from Yavri to the interior. All available guns are being mounted upon the ramparts of the fortress at Belgrade.

The Servian correspondents of the Daily News, Standard and Times note the fact that many Servians are coming to the rear slightly wounded in the hand or forearm. The correspondents believe they shoot themselves to avoid battle.

The Times' Belgrade dispatch says: Col. Antich's retreat to Ivanitza means a much further retreat. Ivanitza is surrounded by high hills, affording the Turks excellent offensive positions. The fact is that the Servian war is about to assume a much less ambitious character than which first undertaken, and is about to resolve itself into a guerrilla affair.

From the Work.

MR. EDITOR: The church is enjoying a glorious revival of religion in this city. Bro. P. H. Moss, our station preacher, commenced his battle about three weeks ago. Oh, what struggles, what wrestlings, prayers, tears and fastings! The Spirit of God came in power about the second week. Now the church is thoroughly revived; sinners, scores of them, under conviction; have had many happy conversions of middle-aged men and women. Some of the men had been prominent sinners of influence. The whole city seems to be moved by the Holy Spirit. Over twenty accessions thus far. The meeting is moving on every day. Mourners at the altar every night. No abatement of interest. Please pray for us. Truly,

Is Wine a Blessing?

I was invited to dine with a clergyman who is now Bishop of Carlisle, and we had a discussion for about two hours. A titled lady was present, and she helped him. I was alone, and had to bear the whole brunt of the battle in the scriptural argument.

"The Bible permits the use of wine," said he.

"Very well," said I, "suppose it does?"

"The Bible sanctions the use of wine."

"Very well, suppose it does?"

"Our Savior made wine."

"I know he did."

"Why, we thought you were prepared to deny this."

"I do not deny it. I can read."

"Wine is spoken of in the Bible as a blessing."

I replied: "There are two kinds of wine spoken of in the Bible."

"Prove it."

"I do not know that I can, but I will tell you what it is—the w-i-n-e that is spoken of as a 'blessing' is not the same w-i-n-e that is a 'mocker,' and the w-i-n-e that is to be drunk in the kingdom of heaven cannot be the w-i-n-e of the wrath of God. So that although I cannot prove it learnedly, I know it is so."

"Now, there are others who go further than I can go; but you will please let me go just so far as I can understand it, and if I cannot go any further don't find fault with me. I hold that the Bible permits total abstinence; and I would rather search the Bible for permission to give up a lawful gratification for the sake of my weak-headed brother, who stumbles over my example into sin, than to see how far I can follow my own propensities without committing sin, and bringing condemnation upon my own soul."

Another gentleman, who came to me for a long talk, said: "I have a conscientious objection to teetotalism, and it is this: Our Savior made wine at the marriage of Cana in Galilee."

"I know he did."

"He made it because they wanted it."

"So the Bible tells us."

"He made it of water."

"Yes."

"Well, he performed a miracle to make that wine."

"Yes."

"Then he honored and sanctified wine by performing a miracle to make it. Therefore," said he, "I feel that if I should give up the use of wine I should be guilty of ingratitude, and should be reproaching my Master."

"Sir," said I, "I can understand how a man should feel so; but is there nothing else that you put by, which our Savior has honored?"

"No, I don't know that there is."

"Do you eat barley bread?"

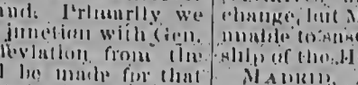
"No," and then began to laugh.

"And why?"

"Because I don't like it."

"Very well, sir," said I, "our Savior sanctified barley bread just as much as he ever did wine. He fed five thousand people on barley loaves manufactured by a miracle. You put away barley bread from the low motive of not liking it. I ask you to put away wine from the higher motive of bearing the infirmity of your weaker brother, and so fulfilling the law of Christ." I wish to say that that man signed the pledge three days afterward.—John B. Gough.

HOW IT LOOKS IN CHINESE.—A hymn book has been issued in China for the benefit of the converts to Christianity who live in that country. The translation of "Jerusalem, my happy home," reads thus:



This seems a little rugged to sing, but is it any worse than we have heard fashionable choirs render it?—Presbyterian.

Art Opinions.

There is a radical difference in the estimate of paintings by artists, and by the larger part of the outside world, that needs to be explained if the two classes of critics are ever to understand each other. To the world in general the interest of a picture depends mainly upon the story it has to tell; to artists its value is based almost solely upon the skill with which the pigments are handled. If one approaches any great picture—a Rubens, a Murillo, a Raphael or a Rembrandt—with the intention of studying the conception of the scene delineated by the painter, he is sharply taken to task by the art critic. "That is a literary view of the subject," is the energetic exclamation, "and hence an improper one." The painting, we are told, is to be studied for the massing and composition of its groups, the management of its lights and shadows, its tones and contrasts of color; it is to be admired for the way in which it is painted, irrespective of its success in delineating an incident or portraying a historical event. The critic is to approve or disapprove of the painting not as to the artist's idea of the event, but as the artist's idea of composition and color. It is of no moment that Rembrandt brings burgomasters and Rubens Flemish women to the scene of the crucifixion; these, if defects at all, are literary defects, and not artistic ones. Macaulay, speaking of certain Venetian pictures, says: "The monstrous absurdity of bringing dogs, archangels, cardinals, apostles, persons of the Trinity and members of the Council of Ten, into one composition, shocks and disgusts me. A spectator who can forgive such faults for the sake of a dexterous disposition of red tints and green tints must have improved his eye at the expense of his understanding." For this he is denounced as uttering a purely literary judgment. The common sense of most people will heartily sanction this view of the subject. But common sense is prone to its mistakes, and never lacks abundant confidence and arrogance in its assertions. It would be quite as wrong to refuse recognition in a picture of that which the artist has essayed to express through the medium of color or form, as it is logically untenable for artists to attempt to tell a story upon canvas, and then insist that the story is not to be heeded. The charm of many pictures lies almost wholly in their scheme of color, in superb effects exclusively technical in character. Just as a poem, as a work of art, rests upon its metrical character, so does a painting, as a work of art, rest upon effects produced by arrangement of lines and contrasts of color; but common sense is quite right in insisting that a poem shall be something more than rhyme and rhythm, and that pictures, in order to be great, must exhibit something more than the triumph of technical skill. Music may exist solely for itself; the melody of verse may captivate us, irrespective of any meaning in the lines; and color may have its own story of harmonies to express; yet the world will scarcely yield enthusiastic admiration to these arts if they possess no meaning else—if feeling is not to be stirred, sentiment gratified, and imagination furnished with new ideas.—Appletons' Journal.

PIG STEALING EXTRAORDINARY. At Bangkok, in Siam, there are a number of native Christians, chiefly mixed descendants of Portuguese, who are hated for their thievish and otherwise habits. Among other accomplishments, they are complete adepts in pig-stealing; so much so that a granter can be whipped up and carried off without the least noise, and even without the animal being perfectly aware of the circumstance. "I was told of a circumstance which occurred to a Danish gentleman, who resided in the factory a few years previous to my visit. He had a sow, with a large family of very fine pigs, and as they were feeding one morning on the wharf, in front of the factory, he was surprised to see one of the pigs rush into the water, apparently against its will, for it gave utterance to the most piercing squeaks as it plunged into the liquid element. The owner immediately went down to the water side, but could see nothing of the runaway. A native Christian, who happened to be fishing from a canoe about twenty yards distant, was asked whether he could afford any explanation of the mystery, but he had seen nothing, and could only say that he had heard a splash in the water a short time before. The owner of the pig was very much surprised, and could not account for the disappearance of the animal by a natural reason. A few mornings afterward the same thing occurred again, and, running down to the water side, the bereaved pig-owner saw the same man fishing in the same spot, but could discover no signs of his pig. A similar phenomenon occurred a third time, but on this occasion the pig stopped suddenly in its flight to the river, and hurried, squeaking, back toward the house, with a part of a fishing line dangling from its mouth. On further examination, a strong hook was found attached to the end of the line, stuck fast in the jaw of the pig, part of a sweet potato, which had been used as a bait, still clinging to the snare. The gentleman for some time afterward kept a good look out for his friend in the boat, but he never made his appearance again.—Gen. Windsor Earle's Eastern Seas.

The Opium Traffic.

The Emperor Hsaking, who ascended the throne in 1796, resolved on extirpating the use of opium. He punished the smokers with pillory and bamboo, and increased the penalty to transportation and death. Its victims are now in every class, even among the Imperial Kindred.

It is destroying China. It has been said the slave trade is merciful compared with this. That fetters the body; this destroys the moral being—the mind, heart and soul. It is an overwhelming thralldom to the victim, who will sell everything, including his wife and child, to obtain the terrible poison, until health, reason and life are lost.

It clips all our missionary success. It continually confronts the missionary, and gives more than just occasion for the taunt, that England has no love, but rather hatred, toward the Chinese, and that her missionary efforts are a sham!

The trade has increased beyond all precedent. In 1817 the trade in cotton was three times as great as that in opium. In 1844 that in opium had become four times greater than the other. In that year we smuggled into China forty thousand chests of opium.

In 1832 the House of Commons concluded: "It was not desirable to abandon the trade which was so important a source of revenue!" China suffered and protested; English Christians and missionary societies remonstrated. Then came the shameful war, with the miserable result of a treaty providing free entrance into China for opium and the Bible!

Now, thank God, English Christians are again resolved on another effort to rid our country of this frightful stain. A society is formed, called "The Anglo-Oriental Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade." Its office—Canada building, King street, Westminster, S. W. God speed it!

Permit me again to urge on all who read this statement to make themselves acquainted with the particulars of the traffic. The few hints and facts here given are but a little of what might be said, did space permit, both as to the iniquitous state of things at present, and also on the possibility of substituting equally lucrative and certainly more wholesome crops in our Indian opium grounds. Shall we hear it, that while a heathen monarch declares that nothing shall induce him to derive a revenue from the vice and misery of his people, Christian England shall at the cannon's mouth force on his people this wickedness and degradation?—London Record.

John Randolph's Religious Views.

Mr. Randolph was a great Bible reader, and was deeply concerned with religious subjects. He employed an excellent and eloquent man, Mr. Abner Clopton, to preach every Sunday to his negroes, in the large chapel he had erected on his plantation. When at home he invariably attended these services, taking his seat by the preacher on the open platform, from which the preacher conducted the services. On many occasions, while kneeling beside the preacher, who was prone to be carried away by the fervor of prayer, Randolph would slap him on the back and call out loudly: "Clopton, that won't do; that's not sound doctrine, Clopton, take that back." And if Clopton remonstrated, Randolph, though keeping himself on his knees, was ready at once for an argument to maintain his point. No one but Mr. Clopton, who knew the eccentricity and honest motives of the man, could have borne with these irreverent interruptions while in the midst of prayer; but Mr. Clopton, when he found Randolph determined to argue the point, either gracefully yielded, or proposed to note the point and argue it at the dwelling house. To visitors at the chapel and these were many—these scenes were exceedingly curious and sometimes absurdly ludicrous. But that was Mr. Randolph's way.

It is said that on one cold Sunday, in this chapel on Mr. Randolph's plantation, while giving out the hymn in the old-fashioned way, two lines at a time, and it was being lustily sung by the negroes, Mr. Clopton, the preacher, observed a negro man put his foot upon which was a new brogan, on the hot stove. Turning toward him, he said in his measured voice: "You rascal you, you'll burn your shoes," as this was a rhyme of the exact meter of the hymn, the negroes all sung it in their loudest tones. Smiling at the error, the preacher attempted mildly to explain by saying: "My colored friends, indeed you are wrong; I didn't intend that for the song;" but there it was again, another rhyme in good measure; so the negroes sung that too with pious fervor. Turning to his congregation, the preacher said somewhat sharply: "I hope you will not sing again, until I have had time to explain;" but this only aroused the negroes, who sung the last word with increased vigor. Mr. Clopton, feeling that his tongue seemed to be tuned to rhyme, abandoned all efforts at explanation, and went on with his services.

A gentleman rode up to a public house in the country and asked: "Who is the master of this house?" "I am, sir," replied the landlord; "my wife has been dead about three weeks."

Life in Other Worlds.

Says Proctor, the astronomer: The question whether or not the planets and stars are inhabited, and, if so, by what sort of beings, has long agitated the minds of astronomers as well as common people. The latter, with the utility argument, reasoned that the heavenly bodies must be peopled by some sort of inhabitants, since it was contrary to the economy of nature to suppose that thousands of worlds have been created, not one of which, excepting our own, is suitable for organic existence. To this it might be answered that facts, and not theories, must be taken as data from which to proceed. Planets and stars are in a continual state of change. From the nebulous stage onward, the matter of which they are composed is never at rest. Necessarily millions of ages must elapse before the surface of the planet is prepared to support any sort of life, either vegetable or animal.

After that comes a period when life in its various stages becomes possible and exists. Then, as a family left to inter-communication dies out, so does organic life become extinct on any world. The period of organic life is, comparatively speaking, but a moment when compared with the whole life of the star, and therefore, in looking over the list of planets, the chances are thousands to one against the present age being the habitable one in any of them. The fact that the life-state is now prevailing in our own planet is no proof that it also prevails in the other worlds. Untold ages passed in the history of the earth before it was prepared, by cooling, to receive us, and similar ages will roll away after the human family has perished from the earth. It will gradually cool, so that the average temperature of the year will become lower and lower, until finally the earth will be, like the moon, barren, cold, the oceans all frozen, and all life extinct.

In more closely considering the various planets of the solar system we find that none of them, except perhaps Venus, affords those conditions which are essential to life. Organic life on Mercury would be impossible on account of the extreme heat, since there water cannot exist save in the form of steam. Mars has oceans, and at certain times of the year these are liquid, but in general they are frozen, and snows prevail over almost the whole planet. Jupiter and Saturn are out of the question. Every indication points to the certainty that they are themselves secondary suns, diffusing intense light and heat to their minor satellites. While Mars has passed the life-bearing stage, Jupiter and Saturn have not reached it. Venus, having a year nearly equal to our own, having seasons similar to ours, and a day and night, is probably the only planet that is now at the stage in which life is possible.

AXMINSTER CARPETS.—Axminster are the most costly and magnificent of British-made carpets, thick, soft and luxurious to the tread, and are only in the rooms of the more wealthy classes. They are almost identical with those of Tournia, and are similar in make, but considerably finer and softer than those of Turkey. They are made almost entirely of fine wool, front and back, knotted in tufts upon the warp threads, by the workman, and held together by an invisible, ground-work of linen thread, a shadowy outline of the pattern being traceable at the back. They are still made, but the sale is limited in consequence of their cost, incident upon the slow process of knotting in the tufts. A short time ago one was made for the Sultan of Turkey, the cost of which was £1,-261. Lately Axminsters are a close imitation of the above, made by a cheaper method, invented and patented by Mr. Templeton, of Glasgow. The process is a species of double weaving. In the first instance long strips of chenille are made, which in appearance have a mottling of colors thrown in indiscriminately, but which, in fact, are the elements of the future pattern. A loom is then set up, with heavy longitudinal threads, which is worked by steam power, and the strips of chenille are employed as the woof, the result being that the seemingly confused tufts of color arrange themselves into accurately-defined patterns, and a heavy, velvet piled carpet is produced, with a hard linen back, instead of the soft woolen back of the original Axminsters. Their comparative cheapness arises partly from the application of steam power, but chiefly because the same effect can be produced with half the quantity of wool used in the real Axminster, sufficient only being required for the velvet surface, while the back is made up of cheaper material.

AN EXPERIMENT WORTH TRYING. A story is told of a Glasgow merchant who on his death-bed sent for a Free Church clergyman. Having some fears regarding his future prospects, he asked the reverend gentleman: "Do you think if I were to leave £10,000 to the Free Kirk that my soul would be saved?" "Well," answered the cautious minister, "I could not just promise you that, but I think it is an experiment worth trying."

Whatever our sorrows, whatever our loneliness may be, in whatever way we may be disappointed or forsaken, a practical faith that the mightiest of all beings, is the wisest and best of all beings, is ever nigh to us, fills up the void and surrounds us with an eternal sympathy.

COME NEAR TO ME.

The way is long, come near to me,
I cannot live alar from thee.
Nor journey to my home above,
Unless thou aid me with thy love.

So many errors clog my soul,
So many evils round me roll;
I faint with all the weary strife
Come near me, Lord, for life or life.

The thorns seem thicker than they were,
Ending the pathway to the tomb:
Thy pierce—and whither shall I flee
Except, dear Lord, I flee to thee?

Come near at morning, noon and night,
Be thy sweet presence my delight;
Thy cheering comfort freely give,
That I may look to thee and live.

Leaven.

MR. EDITOR: Leaven is good or evil, according to its kind. If good, it is a power for good in the community, and gives direction to and shapes public opinion, both in and out of the church of Christ.

The disciples were commanded to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees as an evil whose tendencies might overthrow or undermine their faith, affect their practice, and destroy their peace. The leaven and the meal are a clear demonstration of its wonderful power for good, and vice versa.

This leaven of evil doctrine might beget an improper faith, and hence also improper practice, which, as a wave, must continue to move onward until it is met by its opposite break, and wasted away upon the sea of public opinion.

It is true charity, I suppose, to allow that all who enter the church by taking upon themselves its sacred obligations are in earnest, and do desire their salvation. There are many of these persons who do condemn the practice of going to and partaking of the exercises of the ball-room, the race-track and the theater as morally wrong, and disreputable to the true Christian character, yet who will argue with a gusto the right and the innocency of all grange and church fairs, concerts, tableaux, charades, etc., which are gotten up for some benevolent purpose; while there are others who cannot see the difference between these and those, therefore they feel themselves authorized to go to any or all of the above if they choose. If you should speak to any one of them about this improper conduct, or that these are in bad taste, etc., they throw themselves behind the conduct of other and older members and sometimes pastors too, who both allow and attend tableaux and charades, fairs and sometimes in the church, and feel, or claim to feel, themselves perfectly invulnerable from all the attacks of gospel truth, no matter by whom given, or how earnestly. These charades are getting so common, in places, that the people appear to think that all debts of the church are to be lifted in this way. All such donations savor of evil—fail to have the gospel simplicity and silent innocency which is to leaven the whole earth. They fail to benefit the donor, except in that he is now less able to do so again. The moral appetite of such persons is vitiated, and their consciences so seared that they cannot taste the leaven of sin, nor feel the reproofs of the Spirit. These "fussy people" stir up such a cloud of dust that the rays of the sun of righteousness cannot penetrate, and they conclude, as they cannot see any sin in them, "that they are no harm." The leaven is there, notwithstanding, and would it not be a little better if such persons were to throw themselves in position, so that these refracted rays might be caused to focalize by means of the omniscience, and enable them to see the leaven as it is, and themselves as they ought?

No harm! What a departure is all this from the simplicity of that unostentatious life of the true disciple! These things are either right, or they are wrong. Would it not be well that some attention were paid to what Paul says about the Christian character, and ask ourselves: "If we do evil that good may come, whose damnation is just?" ask if these things do not have the appearance of evil in them? if they are of good report? if they do not give offense to some? or if others' faith is not made weak by them? or if they are not a stone of stumbling to some? Is this the light of the world that the church is to give? Is it any wonder, then, that many walk in darkness? Is a house divided against itself doomed to fall? If so, what is this division likely to work? and what is to become of the high type of Christian holiness taught by both Christ and his apostles? Does not the word command us to speak the same things? And is it not desirable that the church be a unit in faith and practice, that no schisms be in the body? So think many, as well as

ONE AMONG MANY.

Children's Troubles.

We have such a large measure with which to take up annoyances and griefs that when we scoop into it the troubles of children they seem very insignificant. To break a kite-string, or lose a top, or have the head knocked off a China doll, seems nothing to us, but the event is great to children. It is high time that we learned that the trials of the youngsters are as great to them as ours are to us.

In the long catalogue of children's woes leg-ache stands very prominent. After running, racing, climbing and jumping all day long, this is one of the worst troubles. We remember it now—the rolling and tossing to get asleep, and the half cry of distress of which no one but ourselves seemed to have any appreciation. All active children have the leg-ache at night-fall. Blessed the mother whose entertaining story, or the stroke of whose soft hand, silences and soothes and cures!

Hunger is another of the boyhood and girlhood distresses. There may be plenty in the pantry, and yet the children half the time starved. Parents with capacity to swallow a half pound of beef-steak, and the usual accompaniments, do not understand why, mid-forenoon or mid-afternoon, children should be hungry. It is cruel to keep little ones faint and exhausted for lack of food, because the dining hour has not come. All the doctors and dietarians to the contrary, notwithstanding, whenever your children are hungry, whether it be nine, ten or eleven A. M., or two, three or four P. M., give them something to eat.

One of the worst of childhood griefs is subjection to bullies. They are to be found in every school and on every street—the boys who knock your hat down over your eyes and chuck you under the chin, calling you, "Bub," and steal your cap, and trip you up for the fun of seeing you fall down, and dare you to fight, you ten years, they fourteen. We have vivid remembrance of one such bully, and our sufferings at his hand, and we now declare, minister or no minister, if we ever meet him again he had better look out! There is nothing more exasperating to us than to see large boys imposing on small ones. For schoolmasters give such young Herods the rattan in liberal measure. But alas, for the lads who have year after year to submit to the ruffian impositions. To be chased and pulled and mauled, and be able to do nothing in return but bite your lip and clinch your fist, and wish you were a foot taller.

Going to school is among the hardships of children. The pills of knowledge are now sugar-coated, and school-houses are sometimes made attractive with music and flowers and pictures, and teachers who understand and practice the law of kindness. In such cases children are glad when the school hour comes. Not so with many; not so with us in boyhood. We shiver to think of it. A mile and a half through snow-banks a little crusted, so that every other step Broke through, our big sister pulling us along by the tippet, ears tingling with cold, feet half frozen, and all for what we could then see no use in—the learning to read and write and cipher. No cards with marks of good behavior, no medals to hang around the neck, nothing on earth to encourage but going up head occasionally, and a box of the ears if we missed, more frequently. Our sympathies go out for all those who, contrary to their wishes, are obliged to go to school.

But we cannot enumerate the troubles of children. We suspect that they need more rewards and fewer punishments, more apples and less switch, more sympathy and less spunk. While we consider their misshaps they would unconsciously relieve ours. If, instead of standing so much on our dignity, we would get down on all fours and let our children get astride of us, imagining they were a-horseback, probably some of our manhood troubles would fall off at the moment the youngsters got on.—Christian at Work.

Canon Liddon on Evolution.

In the course of a forcible sermon by this eloquent divine he said that, in spite of evolutionists, mankind was one vast and ancient family or brotherhood descended from one common parent. This natural fact was asserted by the Christian apostle at Athens, when he sought to recall a clever but volatile people to a deeper sense of the seriousness of life. "God," he said, "hath made of one flesh all the nations of the earth." The unity of our race had been disputed in modern times; but, until the scientific world were of one mind upon the subject, Christians might safely continue to trust their Bibles. Just let them suppose that, instead of being descended from a single pair of beings, the human race was of hybrid origin, made up of the fusion of a great many distinct races—he would not say of men, but of creatures approximating more or less nearly to the human type—what would become of the moral idea which assume that humanity is a great organic whole? What would become of the sympathies, the duties, the aspirations, which knitted us men as being consciously members of the human race? Would it really be possible to endeavor to cherish, love, respect, and have community of feeling, if at every turn we were haunted by the question how far this or that apparent human being really shared our nature at all, and did not rather belong to some other race of creatures which had little in common with our own nature beyond a little similitude of outward form? What was it which imparted such a sense of moral horror to the idea of cannibalism or murder but the conviction that we human beings were really members of one family, and had the same blood flowing in our veins? Destroy this conviction, and it became difficult to tell how human rights ought to be respected, or whether they ought not to be largely extended. If the frontier of the human race were as indistinct as was sometimes suggested, it was not easy to understand upon what principles of morality or justice some, at any rate, of the more intelligent prisoners who were now caged up in our public gardens were still detained there, or why they were denied some sort of secular education, or were deemed incapable of holding property or voting for the representation of the people. Why were they not just as much our neighbors as the wounded man on the road to Jericho, or the Samaritan who aided him? Why should we hesitate to admit that our estimate of their claims upon our charity was not altogether what it should be? A paradox in the long run was its own best corrective; and, whatever we might say in moments of speculative thought, we all practically acted on the belief that all mankind form one single race, with a sharply-defined frontier separating it from all other whatever; and we act on the supposition that this fact is the ground of those many and unceasing duties which we owed to one another.

The Eccentric Earl Dudley.

When Mr. Ward became Viscount Dudley, and took possession of the family estates, he suffered as much embarrassment as his father from an overgrown fortune. He one day described this embarrassment to my Uncle Archy in very graphic terms. "When I came to my estate," he said, "I resolved to spend my whole income within the year. With that object in view I purchased the estate of Eduam, in Scotland; I bought a library at Venice; I repaired my house in Park Lane, etc.; but a rise unexpectedly took place in the price of iron, which brought me £10,000, and you know one can't always be prepared for such contingencies." When Lord Palmerston, in his autobiography, mentions, as a notable instance of the disinterested love of power, that his friend Dudley would have gladly given £6,000 a year to remain in office, he evidently was not aware that to Dudley £6,000 a year was a mere trifle. One of Lord Dudley's eccentric habits was that of speaking to himself or thinking aloud. Soon after he had succeeded to the title of Dudley and Ward, a lady asked Lord Castlereagh how he accounted for the custom. "It is only Dudley speaking to Ward," was the answer. Lord Dudley was introduced at an evening party to Lady N., whom he was requested to hand down to supper. Her ladyship availed herself of the opportunity to present her two daughters, after which ceremony she overheard him, as they went down stairs, muttering to himself in his usual undertone: "The fair one is plain; the dark one is not amiss; but the fair one is exceedingly plain." "I am glad, my lord," says Lady N., with good-humored readiness, "that at all events the dark one pleases you." A gentleman from Staffordshire prevailed on Lord Dudley to be present at court. They got on very well as far as St. James street, where they were stopped nearly half an hour by the line of carriages. His lordship then forgot himself; and, after a long pause, began: "Now this tiresome country squire will be expecting me to ask him to dinner. Shall I ask him, or shall I not? No, I think he would be a bore." The individual so unexpectedly black-balled was at first confounded, but, recollecting his companion's infirmity, commenced in turn an audible soliloquy: "Now this tiresome old peer will be asking me to dine with him to-day. Shall I go, or shall I not go? No, I think it would be a bore." This impromptu was well taken, and the invitation was given in earnest and accepted.

After sitting a long time with a lady to whom he was paying a morning visit, Lord Dudley exclaimed aloud: "I wonder when this tiresome woman will go away!"

At dinner given by Lord Wilton, who had one of the best cooks in London, Lord Dudley tasted some dish of which he did not approve, and, forgetting where he was, began apologizing to the company for the badness of the entertainment. "The fact is," said he, "that my head cook was taken ill, and some kitchen girl, I suppose, has been employed to dress the dinner."

Lord Dudley, receiving a visit from the poet Rogers, at Paris, proposed that they should go together to the Catacombs. It has often been remarked of Rogers that, with his fine bald head, wrinkled skin and sunken cheeks, he was more like a death's head than any man that was ever seen alive. Accordingly, when the poet had spent an hour or two in the abodes of mortality, and was about to make his exit, the keeper, startled at his death-like appearance, tried to stop him, crying out: "Hallo! Get you back! You have no right to come out!" Rogers afterward complained to Lord Dudley that he had cruelly deserted him in this emergency. "My dear Rogers," replied the earl, "I did not like to interfere, you looked so much at home."—John Sinclair's "Old Stories and Distant Days."

Boldness for Christ.

One of Frederick the Great's best generals was Hans Joachim Von Zieten. He was never ashamed of his faith. Once he declined an invitation to come to his royal master's table, because on that day he wished to present himself at the table of his Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. It was sacrament day. The next time he appeared at the palace the King, whose infidel tendencies were well known, made use of some profane expressions about the holy communion of the Lord's Supper, and the other guests laughed at the remarks made on the occasion. Zieten shook his gray head solemnly, stood up, saluted the King, and then, in a firm voice, said: "Your majesty knows well that in war I have never feared any danger, and everywhere have boldly risked my life for you and my country. But there is One above us who is greater than you and me—greater, that all men; he is the Savior and Redeemer, who has died also for your majesty, and has dearly bought us all with his own blood. This holy One I can never allow to be mocked or insulted; for on him repose my faith, my comfort, and my hope in life or death. In the power of this faith your brave army has courageously fought and conquered. If your majesty undermine this faith you undermine at the same time the welfare of your State. I salute your majesty." This open confession of his Savior by Zieten made a powerful impression on the King. He felt he had been wrong in his attack on the faith of his general, and he was not ashamed to acknowledge. He gave his hand to Zieten—his right hand, placing the left on the old man's shoulder—and said with emotion: "O happy Zieten! How I wish I could also believe it! I have the greatest respect for you. This shall never happen you again." The King then rose from the table, dismissed his other guests, but said to Zieten: "Come with me into my cabinet." What passed in that conference, with closed doors, between the great King and his greater general, no one has ever learned; but this we know: that the Lord's own words were verified to Zieten: "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven."—British Workman.

The Grace of Gladness.

One spring of gladness is wholesome, noble work. No man is glad when living to himself. Man is made for the life of communion; the perfect form of human life was the life of the life which found its blessedness in giving itself to mankind. There is physical gladness in the glow of a healthy body. That glow is the fruit of energetic action. Thus sluggards, laggards, know nothing of the physical joy of life. Work for God, work for man, work that is twice blessed—which blesseth him that gives and him that takes—is the correspondent condition of a vigorous, growing health in the spiritual sphere. The old monks were glad because their lives were fruitful. I speak of their best days; they became the laziest and dearest men in Christendom. But when the institution was young they had work on hand which they believed the world would rejoice in. They believed themselves the saviors of society; that by their toils, their tears, their prayers, they were helping it, beyond the power of kings and captains to help it; that their uplifted hands kept heaven's gates open; that their constant service was a heaven's ladder by which angels of God descended upon the world.

Let loose the wings of your loving ministry; stir your soul to some work which shall scatter blessings. If you would taste joy, fresh and pure from its fountain, do good, be ready to communicate. It is this which makes the soul instinct with vigor, aglow with health and radiant with joy. Map is a cripple, a half-developed being, until his selfish ministry is drawn forth. When he has tasted the joy of doing good he is like the lame man after Peter's touch—he goes out into the great temple of life, walking and leaping, and praising God. Try it. If life is sad, make it glad by service—service that strains your power, that a higher power only can make you strong enough to render. But here we touch the deep perennial fountain of gladness—the joy of the Holy Ghost. The joy of a man who believes that God is with him is exuberant, irrepressible. The delight of doing the will of God, to those who have tasted it, masters all other joy. "My meat and my drink is to do the will of him that sent me, and finish his work."—London Congregationalist.

EARLY IMPRESSIONS.—A few years since a gentleman from England brought a letter of introduction to a gentleman in America. The stranger was of accomplished mind and manners, but in sentiment an infidel. The gentleman to whom he brought the letter of introduction, and his lady, were active Christian philanthropists. They invited the stranger to make their house his home, and treated him with every possible attention. Upon the evening of his arrival, just before the usual hour for retiring, the gentleman, knowing the peculiarity of his guest's sentiments, observed to him that the hour had arrived in which they usually attended family prayers; that he should be happy to have him remain and unite with them; or, if he preferred, he could retire. The gentleman intimated that it would give him pleasure to remain. A chapter of the Bible was read, and the family all knelt in prayer, the stranger with the rest. In a few days the stranger left this hospitable dwelling, and embarked on board a ship for a foreign land. In the course of three or four years, however, the providence of God again led that stranger to the same dwelling. But, oh, how changed! He came the happy Christian, the humble man of piety and prayer. In the course of the evening's conversation he remarked that when he, on the first evening of his previous visit, knelt with them in family prayer, it was the first time for many years that he had bowed to his Maker. This fact brought to his mind such a crowd of recollections, it so vividly reminded him of a parent's prayers, which he had heard at home, that it completely absorbed his attention. His emotion was so great that he did not hear one syllable of the prayer which was offered, from its commencement to its close. But God made this the instrument of leading him, from the dreamy wilds of infidelity to the peace and joy of piety. His parents had long before gone to their rest; but the prayers they had offered for and with the lisping boy had left an influence which could not die.

The Bible looks at man as a mother looks at her child in the cradle—with a tender sympathy toward him, as weak, sinful, poor and ignorant. It breathes the tender sentiments of humanity, and hence it has survived so long.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

IN MEMORIAM.

DIED, in this city, June 27, 1876, Mrs. JAMES B. McDOWELL, youngest daughter of Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D.

We record the death of this charming woman with a sad heart. During our short pastorate in this city we had found no greeting more cheerful, no counsel more wise, and no friendship more cordial than hers. Born in the church, educated in its faith, familiar with its usages, the years of life witnessed the development of a character so symmetrical in its moral and intellectual proportions that we wondered not that her death had saddened the whole community.

In her childhood she gave promise of an intellectual activity and vigor above her years, and the promise was realized in a refined culture, which sought the luxury of knowledge in every department of science. She loved poetry and music and flowers, nor shunned those branches of knowledge which required severe and patient study. Although familiar with almost every department of literature, her reading had been confined chiefly to such books as imparted information, and helped to give vigor and elasticity to thought. In social life she was brilliant, gentle and attractive, and her presence was felt as the inspiration of brightness and of love. Fluent in conversation, easy and graceful in her manners, yet unconscious of the charms which won universal admiration, her guileless heart found joy in communion with nature and with friends, for nature and friends were the gift of God.

At home she was loved. Ingenuous, transparent, cheerful, unselfish, the friend of the children, the confessor of her father, the solace of her mother, lived and idolized by her sisters—so beautifully and so perfectly had she filled her sphere that the light seemed to have been extinguished when her spirit departed.

Diligent yet shielding, as a Christian, she had known and adored the Savior as a child, and in the maturity of her womanhood her heart glowed with rapture as she talked of His love and longed to be like Him. Especially had this deeper and more hallowed religious experience been enjoyed during the last few months.

She was never unmindful of the poor. From her childhood she had learned to pity and to help, and the cottage of the widow has often been gladdened by the kindly visit of "dear little Emily."

The church had no interest to which she did not gladly respond. Its systematic benevolences engaged her sympathies; and, beside the liberality of her generous hand, the thought of her heart was engaged in plans of greater usefulness. She had been a prompt, diligent, proficient Sabbath school teacher. Her place in the church will not soon be filled. With her music was not an art—it was devotion; and, whether she prayed or sang or played or sang a solo, there was an inspiration in the service, because in her heart she praised God. The last Sabbath she attended church she sang in her own inimitable manner, as a solo, the following touching lines from the Amaranth, and it seemed as if some voice from afar, with the sadness of celestial tones, were chanting a requiem for the early departure of some listening one. Alas! it was the utterance of one's soul to realize the accomplishment of her own prophetic songs:

> While on life's sea I'm but a voyager
> Seeking a port where storms shall cease,
> Let me not fear the angry billow's roar,
> Why should I spread my wings and fly
> Straight to yonder worlds of joy?

How the last stanzas thrill the heart as memory goes back to that sacred hour!

> Could I share his people's joy
> Midst the ransomed crowd rejoicing,
> This sea of toil would pass away—
> Yon blissful angels know to hear,
> Spread thy wings, thy soul prepare,
> Straight to yonder worlds of joy.

But the voice is hushed, and will only be heard

> "Midst the ransomed throng rejoicing."

The five years of married life were spent mainly under the parental roof. Over the wife's fond devotion to her husband there reigned the supreme desire that he who sinned her love should share the joy of Christ's salvation. In the ingenuousness of her pure and holy womanhood, while he lingered, hopeful-hearted, over the dying form, in tones of tenderness and resignation she exhorted him to meet her in heaven. Her heart had never known grief; to her the world was bright, for she had known Jesus from a child, and the years of life multiplied the joys she found in communion with him. Although the two days of her illness were days of intense agony, and she could but know the distress of the friends around her, here in, amid the spirit rejoiced in the triumphant assurance that "God's will is best."

For many hours before her death I was permitted to stand near her bedside. Such "chess" such joy; such anguish, such composure; such reluctance to go, such readiness to depart. I could fill many pages with her thoughtful utterances; they will be cherished by her friends.

Often, when recovering from a paroxysm which we thought was the last, she exclaimed: "Jesus can make a dying bed feel soft as downy pillows are." On the entrance of her physician she said: "Doctor, do you think I will die?" "I do not feel as if I were dying," when he replied: "Madam, the indications excite our utmost fears." She said: "It is hard to die, to leave my happy home, where my heart has known no sorrow; to leave my husband, father, mother, sisters, friends; the bright hopes of the future—but if it is God's will, I joyfully submit. Let me go. God will take care of me. The Savior will show me the way." Once when her mother, no longer able to repress the deep anguish of her heart, said: "Lady, my darling child, are you no better?" she answered: "No, mother; only a little nearer to Jesus." And again, when mother said: "My precious child, I should have gone before you, and you there, but now you leave me here," sweetly said: "Dear mother, you taught me the way to heaven, and come and welcome you when you there." Often as friends would enter presence would remind her of absent and she would charge them with of love to, whole families, calling name. As the city bell struck the hour she asked if it was not the clock struck. On being told it was, she When it strikes the next hour I heaven." Not a shadow fell over her not a murmur escaped her lips. With full realization of all that death means a steady and unfaltering step, she the cold stream and crossed to the shore. To the wail of anguish, which not half the grief of the stricken ones, which died away upon the dark she passed out of sight, there was back: "Meet me in heaven." We doubt she had fulfilled her mission—this brighter, better, happier, became her Christian womanhood trod the path us; and we would press her beautiful form to our loving bleeding and wait until God shall transform it higher sphere, and the spirit, clothed light, shall come again, and wander forever over the fair fields of the Canaan, or, walking beside the river, we shall gather the golden from the trees of life.

At fifteen minutes to eight o'clock evening of June 27, Jesus took his rest.

> "Farewell! I did not know for years
> But Hope art gone, and now to part
> So angels walked unknown in tears,
> And when they rise were recognized."

VICKSBURG, Miss., July, 1876.

SISTER ELIZA C. SAGER was born in Orangeburg district, S. C., on the seventeenth of August, 1800, and died at her residence at Robinsons Springs, Elmore county, Ala., on the nineteenth of December, 1875, in the seventy-sixth year of her age. She was the daughter of Rev. Jacob and Mary Whitstone, sharing the advantages of religious training and example, she professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in her twelfth year, from that time to her death she was faithful in her adhesion to the Church of her choice. In process of time she married Mr. [illegible] and settled in Alabama, and by habits of economy and prudent management acquired an ample competency to educate their children. In every period of life she acted well her part, as a wife affectionate, as a mother tender, as a mistress, kind and prudent in the management of her domestic affairs. But in the close of life adversity, like a storm, swept across the path of life. She was widowed by the death of her husband—war swept away her property. She was left alone dependent on her children and on their duty. Still, amidst the wreck of fortune she stood firm, trusting in God. She was not permitted to give her dying testimony in favor of religion, for by apoplexy, she passed away suddenly. We from the history of a long life spent in the service of God, we have strong confidence that our loss is her infinite gain; and though absent from us, she rests with the Lord in heaven, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

A FRIEND.

REV. JOHN G. WHITE was born in North Carolina. When quite small he was removed to the State of Georgia, where he was brought up as a mechanic, married and reared his family. In the fall of 1871 he moved to Webster parish, La. In 1872 he joined the Methodist Church South, under the pastorate of Bro. Kimball. In the fall of 1873 he moved to Fillmore, where he resided till his death, which occurred suddenly on the first day of July, 1876. He died in the sixty-seventh year of his age and the nineteenth day of this family his loss is irreparable. May the grace sustain them in this sad bereavement, and enable them, through faith to say "that all things work together for good to them that love God."

G. W. P.

DIED, near Douglas, Lincoln parish, La., July 2d, 1876, Mrs. LYDIA A. [illegible], in the twenty-sixth year of her age. She was born December 9, 1850, and was married to Mr. George L. Pipes January 12, 1868. In 1869 she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and ever afterwards walked an upright walk and godly conversation. Her piety was steady and uniform. She moved quietly in the even tenor of her way. She never sought prominence, but was of a modest, retiring disposition. True worth showing itself more in her life and every day walk than before the public eye. She was truly a daughter of Sarah, believed by all who knew her. Her husband, parents, brothers and sisters have the sympathy of many friends in their bereavement.

R. T. P.

DIED, in Carroll parish, La., on the twelfth of July, 1876, little WILLIE, son of John and Louise Bayard, aged four years and four months. Yes, he is gone home in the skies, at the summons of Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for such is the kingdom of heaven." Now his sweet voice no more will greet us, while we mourn, we mourn not as those who have no hope. May the Lord grant that she has left behind like so many to meet her in heaven.

C. T.

DIED, in Morgan City, La., on Sunday, July 9, 1876, LOUISA REXROAT, eldest daughter of Mrs. A. L. Rexroat, aged [illegible] years. God has seen fit to pluck out of Sabbath school one of his lovely buds, a little one and transplant it in that heavenly garden above. The parents should not sorrow as those that have no hope, but may be ever ready to meet their loved ones, not lost, but gone before.

R. S.

DIED, in Newton county, Ga., on the [illegible] 1876, BRONZE H., son of Peter H. and A. Wilson, aged eleven years, eleven months and eleven days. Just as the tender bud was beginning to bud it was cut down by the frosts of death, and we are solemnly reminded that we all must die. May God comfort the hearts of the bereaved family.

A SONG OF LAND AT SEA.

ind, low piping through the shrouds all day, thou not whisper of the woods to me?
r the wings that I might speed away this trackless waste of weary sea?

n, sweet wind, a song of summer leaves,

s rustling under moss-grown eaves, ddrops tinkling on the cottage pane.

thy pinions heat the springing wheat, large field-daisies bowed their starry

ld thyme sighed to thee, and fitfully sweet scent of gorse was blown across the downs.

one lone mile of moor or woodland green!

Alarmed by the intense con-ion carried in his words, the ster tells us that for three whole days he prayed, entreated and argued, endeavoring to move the Queen from her purpose, but all to no effect; she remained as stubborn as fate. The ceremony was performed on the thirteenth of May, 1610, but the festivities were not to terminate until the sixteenth. The next day, being still very restless and uneasy, he proposed to go to the arsenal to see the Duc de Sully.

He could not stay one moment in any place, nor conceal his irresolution and disorder. In the midst of these agitations he said to the Queen: "I know not what to do; I have no great inclination to go to the arsenal, because I shall put myself into a passion." She persuaded him not to go. Then he went toward the window, and striking his forehead with his hand, "My God!" said he, "there is something here which strangely troubles me; I know not what is the matter; I cannot go from hence."—Matthieu.

With a strange infatuation he would not allow any guards to attend him; consequently he was followed only by a few gentlemen on horseback and some footmen. By another fatality he sat with the blinds of the window fully drawn up, thus revealing his exact position to every passer-by. As the coach turned into the Rue Feronnerie, a very narrow thoroughfare, it was met by two carts, and, being unable to pass, was obliged to stop at the corner of the street. In consequence of this block the attendants took another turning, intending to meet the carriage at the end of the street, so that only two footmen followed it, and one of these fell back to fasten his garter. Ravaillac, who had followed the coach from the Louvre, perceiving it had stopped and no person was near it, advanced to the side on which the King sat. His cloak, wrapped round his left arm, concealed the knife he held in his hand; and creeping between the steps and the carriage, as if he were trying to pass, he sprang upon one of the spokes of the wheel, and plunged the knife into the King's side a little above the heart. Henri was at the moment reading a letter to the Duc d'Epernon, who sat beside him; feeling himself struck, he cried out: "I am wounded!" At the same instant the assassin repeated the blow with such quickness that not one in the coach had time to oppose it, and then with a sigh the King fell back dead. The murderer made no attempt to escape, and was immediately captured. Upon being put to the question, he maintained that he had no accomplices; that he alone had conceived and executed the design upon being told the King was going to make war upon the Pope. Under the most exquisite torture, and even upon the scaffold, no other confession could be extorted from him. Nine-teen times previously had Henri's life been attempted by papal, Spanish or Jesuitical tools.—Whether Ravaillac was an agent of one of these three moving powers, or whether he was indeed simply a solitary fanatic, seems likely to remain a historical problem. The Jesuits certainly hovered about his dungeon with an anxious assiduity very suspicious.—Temple Bar.

He Careth for You.

I am disposed to think that one of the most positive and permanent hindrances to Christian growth and spirituality is not the cherishing of some known sin, or the power of some evil passion, but the corroding pressure of worldly anxieties. The anxiety that robs the soul of peace and comfort, that lifts a shadow between it and the starry sky, that shuts out the thought in the house of God and at the very altar of prayer is not: How may I gratify this fleshly lust, how may I taste the sweets of this forbidden fruit? but: How will it go with these worldly undertakings in which all my temporal hopes are involved?

Worry is to preach with an apostle's zeal and utterance to the man before us in the pew, who seems looking right into our eye, and hanging upon the words of our lips, but he does not catch a syllable that we say, while his troubled mind is wrestling with the questions: "What shall I eat, and what shall I drink, and wherewithal shall I be clothed?" God has provided well for the natural and sustaining care. He has uttered over it his gentle and tender remonstrance: "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on?" He has written for it the assurance of his fatherly, intelligent sympathy: "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." He has framed an argument for hope and trust from his own care for the "fowls of the air," and the "lilies of the field," and has added exceeding rich and precious promises.

There are those who rest on these gracious assurances, and abide, under all fluctuations of their earthly lot, in perfect peace. But there are many, even of those who hope they are the children of God, who are worried and fretted and burdened still with these daily anxieties. They have so much at stake! Their enterprises are large. Their all is invested. If their schemes do not succeed they will be utterly ruined. And there are so many dependent upon them! They could shift for themselves if they stood alone. They could accept a trust. They could lie down in a blanket under the hedge or beneath the open sky. But wife and children and aged parents, how are these to be provided for? And then there are so many sharp competitors on the path of their ventures! A hundred hands are reaching for this prize they desire to win. Bolder spirits, stronger than they perhaps, more enduring, more unscrupulous, are running the race with them. Their own health and strength are a fluctuating capital. Dark crises may be looming up from behind the horizon, just ahead. How will it fare with all the precious interests involved?

Ah, my friends, how you rob your souls of that heritage of peace and quietness which they might possess! Let your very ignorance of the future, the very uncertainties of to-morrow, minister to hope, instead of fear. You "know not what a day may bring forth;" very well, it may then bring a blessing, instead of a curse. The uncertainty may turn in your favor, instead of against you. Why do you not sometimes reason in this way? God knows and sees and feels all your wants and all your solicitudes. He bids you cast all your care upon him, because he careth for you. He assures you that you are dearer to him than those wandering foragers of the air, for whom he so bountifully provides. If he clothe with such magnificence the grass of the field in a pomp of purple royalty beyond the glory of Solomon, will he not "much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" His name is "Jehovah Jireh," and the translation is an immovable rock, upon which our feet may stand with a confidence never shaken. "The Lord will provide."

And then for all our earthly need, and under the pressure of all our earthly care, the great Provider proposes a sure covenant: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." For every one who will enter into this covenant with God there is rest. Worldly anxiety is at an end. Each day he is sure of his daily bread, and the "morrow shall take thought for the things of itself."—Rev. A. L. Stone, D. D.

"Old Sarah" on Fighting Devils.

Old Sarah said in prayer meeting the other day: "My good friends, this yer fighting devils with devils ain't jest the thing. When some one gets angry, you get angry too—that ain't no way. When some one gets to talking about you, you go to talking about them—it don't do no good at all. Now I tried fighting devil against devil in that ways a long while, but I never gained a bit, my friends. Devils don't want to kill devils; they only help each other on. If I get envious because somebody's proud, who 'gets hurt,' I'd like to know? Not the devil, you may reckon, sure! Now I fights angels against devils; and the angels is always sure to beat. When anybody says something bad about me, I just says: 'Now angels, good angels, I don't know how many of you I shall want to help me, but you must stand by me till this thing is through with, 'cause I must conquer.' And when I gets insulted, and the devil lies up above my eyes, I say: 'Angels, be quick, and overcome the devil that's rushing in.' And they always do. I helps God had twelve legions for Jesus, and he has as much as a dozen for you and me any time. The angels is the strongest. The right makes 'em strong. There be more for us than there be against us. I tell ye all we want is our eyes opened to see some of these yer folks filling all the hills, just as they did in Elisha's time. There a'n't anything they are afraid of, because they know God is in them and for them. And we'll get that strong some day. When I've got into that company, brethren and sisters, I feel as if I could do anything. You can't grieve me, because I says: 'Pshaw! who cares?—the angels are with me.' I don't know anything I'm afraid of, only gossips. When I hear folks cutting each other up and enjoying themselves saying over some poor creature's faults, then I can't hardly keep my tongue. 'Little children, love one another.'

"I expect this world is mighty full of angels; and I just do hope you'll call on them to fight your battles for you. What they got to do but to help you? They doesn't want to waste their time any more than we do, jess singing. They's trained to do God's work for him; and that's what they's 'round for."

Her language, which is mixed with good English and good accent, is not merely quaint—it is eloquent.—Bystander.

THE CAMPHOR TREE. One of the most useful and marvellous productions of the vegetable kingdom that enriches China, and more particularly the provinces of Kiangsee and Canton, is the camphor tree. This stupendous laurel, which often adorns the banks of the rivers, was in several places found by Lord Amherst's embassy above fifty feet high, with its stem twenty feet in circumference. The Chinese themselves affirm that it sometimes attains the height of more than three hundred feet, and a circumference greater than the extended arms of twenty men could embrace.

Camphor is obtained from the branches by steeping them, while fresh cut, in water for two or three days, and then boiling them till the gum, in the form of a white jelly, adheres to a stick which is used in constantly stirring the branches. The fluid is then poured into a glazed vessel, where it congeles in a few hours. To purify it the Chinese take a quantity of finely-powdered earth, which they lay at the bottom of a copper basin; over this they place a layer of camphor, and then another layer of earth, and so on, until the vessel is nearly filled, the last or uppermost layer being of earth. They cover this last layer with the leaves of a plant called pe-ho, which seems to be a species of mentha or mint.

They now invert the second basin over the first, and make it air-tight by luting. The whole is then submitted to the action of a regulated fire for a certain length of time, and then left to cool gradually. On separating the vessels the camphor is found to have sublimed, and to have adhered to the upper basin. Repetitions of the same process complete its refinement. Besides yielding this valuable ingredient, the camphor tree is one of the principal timber trees of China, and is used not only in building, but in most articles of furniture. The wood is dry and of a light color, and, although light and easy to work, is durable and not liable to be injured by insects.—Chambers' Journal.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Wesleyans have in South Africa 15,886 church members and 18,203 scholars. In West Africa they have 10,848 church members and 8,091 scholars.

—The "Old Swedes' church" of Philadelphia has celebrated its one hundred and seventy-sixth anniversary. The Swedes first came to Delaware in 1631.

—The vast interior of South Africa, from the Vaal river to the Central African lakes, is open to missionary effort. North Central Africa can be reached by the Gambia river under British protection.

—A lady in England has given to Bishop Quintard, of Tennessee, $11,000 for the University of the South, an institution under the control of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

—The synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church (Old School) met recently, at Pittsburg, and chose the Rev. Joseph Beattie, late missionary to Syria, moderator. It has about one hundred ministers and congregations, and raised last year $100,000, or $42 per member.

—By the recentanion of the English Presbyterians and the Scotch Synod of United Presbyterians, we have a new ecclesiastical body to be called "The Presbyterian Church of England." It will number 283 congregations, with 30,000 members, and an annual income of £100,000. The Presbytery of Liverpool will contain 30 churches, and that of London 60.

—What with four hundred missionaries, two hundred tract distributors, one hundred and fifty Bible readers, etc., there are, besides the regular clergy, some fourteen hundred Christian workers among the London poor. At a late meeting in Whitechapel, a sort of Five Points in London, Lord Shaftesbury, who presided, said that the labors of Moody and Sankey were still bearing fruit among the population.

The Catholic World, in a historical article on the Catholic Church in the United States, gives the following statistics: "A hundred years ago there were not more than 25 priests in the United States; in 1808 there were supposed to be 80; in 1830 the number had risen to 332, and in 1848 to 800. In ten years, from 1862 to 1872, the number of priests was more than doubled, having grown from 2,217 to 4,830. In 1875 there were, according to the official statistics of the various dioceses, 5,074 priests, 1,275 ecclesiastical students, and 6,525 churches and chapels in the United States. There are also, at the same time, 23 theological seminaries, 52 colleges, 257 academies and select schools, 1,545 parochial schools, 21 asylums and 11 hospitals under the authority and control of the Catholic hierarchy of this country."

—It is not so great cost in this country that a young man joins the church. In some communities it is not so; it is a disadvantage. But it would try the faith of not a few if it might be a wholesome sifting of converts—to go through the trial which native Christian believers sometimes endure. The heathen father of a zealous young convert in the Yangchow church, whenever he found his son at meeting, would come and, seizing him by his cue of hair, would lead him out forcibly if he could, otherwise forcibly. At the communion services last June this persevering young believer hid himself in the loft of the meeting-place, and so eluded the vigilance of his father, who looked in twice to see if he was there, but who fortunately gave over his search at nine for the sin to descend and join with his fellow-disciples in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.—Advocate.

—Southern Episcopalians are looking for help from England. The Bishop of Tennessee is now in England where he recently met a party of ladies and gentlemen, and presented the claims of the new University of the South. He stated that owing to the civil war the church in the Southern States had been hopelessly impoverished, and it was now the general desire to found a general university for the united dioceses of Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Arkansas, Florida and Texas, a region embracing an area of 900,000 square miles, and a population of 9,000,000. The chief objection those who sought to assist the church was to old grass stones for building a theological college, where young men could be trained for the ministry. It had been already stated that toward this purpose £1,000 could put up at Swanee, Tenn., a neat, but substantial stone building, and £10,000 would also endow the divinity professorship or six scholarships. Speeches favoring the project were made by the Bishops of Derry, Mr. Beresford Hope, M. P., the Bishop of Winchester and others.

Venezuela comes out for religious liberty. The decree establishing it contains eleven articles, which collectively leave no question as to what this liberty amounts to. Article 1 reads: "Religious liberty is established by the constitution of the republic; the public or private profession of any religion is free in so far as the belief in or observance of it shall not disturb the public peace, offend morality, or interfere with constitutional and legal order." But articles 3 and 4 make this restriction: "Venezuela has the right to prevent the entrance to or departure from its territory of the ministers of any denomination; this right will be exercised by the national executive with respect to such ministers as he shall deem prejudicial to the public or to the sovereignty of the republic." The State does not recognize; nor will it admit to its territory, archbishops or bishops, ecclesiastical chapters, or any ecclesiastical hierarchy, as it considers them incompatible with the rights of independence and the sovereignty of the country." This is not absolute freedom, but it is a good step toward it.

A CHILD'S EVENING PRAYER.

Jesus, Savior, bow thine ear,
Listen to my evening prayer;
Be thou present, be thou near,
Make thy little one thy care.

All the sins I've done this day—
And to sin I know I'm prone—
Wash them in thy blood away,
Make me, keep me, all thine own.

Thy little hand would be,
In thine own blest footsteps treading,
Oh, my Savior, look on me—
Me for whom thy blood was shed.

Do thou bless my parents dear,
My brothers, sisters, all I have—
Every blessing that can cheer,
Pour upon them from above.

Sleep will shortly close my eyes—
Perfect watch around me keep—
Let the morning when I rise,
By thy hand may I be led.

Led by thee then every day,
Whatever comes, will all be well;
And when thou call'st my soul away,
With happy angels let me dwell.

From Our Little Friends.

BRUNT PRAIRIE, July 7, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: In appreciation for the entertaining excellencies contained in your paper, I write again. It has been more than a year since I last wrote to you. The rich gleanings from the faithful and pure shine from the columns of your ADVOCATE.

Like jewels set in rings of gold,
Or like the pearls in coronets,
Are precepts in the Book of God.

refining and purifying us with the imaginings of beauty that the nectar of the fairest flowers would fail to paint.

Our pastor is Bro. Freeman. We all love him very dearly. His energy and zeal call for a crown of success. Dear Mr. Editor, will you pray for us—our pastor and his people? We want a blessing—an outpouring of the love of God. We earnestly ask your help.

In my next letter I hope I will have something pleasant to tell you of our Sabbath school. Fearing you will grow weary with me, I ask you to pray for your little correspondent.

LILLIAS MAY WILLIAMS.

STEPHENVILLE, MISSISSIPPI, July 6, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I often read letters in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE from little children, and as I never have seen one from where I live I have concluded to write to you. I love to read your dear, good paper. It tells us so many pretty stories. It is a welcome visitor to our home. What has become of Grandpa Goodale? We miss his stories, and wish he would write again. We have a good Sabbath school at St. Stephen's. Mr. Pelham is our superintendent, and we like him very much. Mr. Johnston is our preacher this year. I think he is a good man. Everybody likes him. Our protracted meeting will commence on the second Saturday in September.

Your friend, LULA RIVERS.

A Voyage of Discovery.

There was an odd sort of craft moored in the back yard one morning. It looked marvelously like a large wheelbarrow, but Fred and Millie called it a boat; and they surely ought to have known what it was, for they were curled up in it. They held a pole from which floated a crimson shawl by way of a flag, and there was a great throwing out and pulling in of Millie's skipping-rope, hooting upon Fred's tin trumpet, and many orders to imaginary sailors. Aunt Amabel laughingly watched the performance from her window for a little while, then she called: "Ship ahoy! What ship's that?"

"The Leghigh," answered Millie promptly. "We're exploring expedition; but not exactly that either. We are very rich, and have a ship of our own, and we are traveling around the world in it to learn everything. We mean to go to China now, and find out how tea looks when it's growing, how they grow it, and all about it."

"Wouldn't it be well to begin with something that grows nearer home?" asked grandpa. "And learn how cotton is made into flour, for instance, because there is a small expedition under Capt. Jonas, about to start for the mill this morning, and you would like to go."

They did not wait for her to finish the sentence. Their play vessel was nothing compared with a ride in the old wagon with Jonas; and they sprang from the wheelbarrow, took down their flag in great haste, and ran into the house to get ready.

"Please remember that you are on a voyage of discovery, and are expected to return and report," laughed auntie, as the wagon rolled away.

Perhaps that made them more observing everything more carefully than they might otherwise have done.

"We want to learn everything about it," Millie said; and as they entered the mill she eyed everything curiously from the door where the grain-dust looked golden in the sunlight, to the far corners where it lay white in bags, boxes and bins.

The miller and Jonas began an earnest chat about the work to be done; but Millie and Fred found the miller's son, a boy of fifteen, ready to show them about the place and answer their questions. He pointed out the hopper through which the grain poured, showed where it passed to the great stones that crushed and ground it by their turning, and finally took them to the room where the pure white flour was ready for sending off.

"How much work it takes to do it all!" said Millie. "And before it came here there was the planting of the seed and taking care of the grain; and after the flour goes from here somebody has all the work of making the bread."

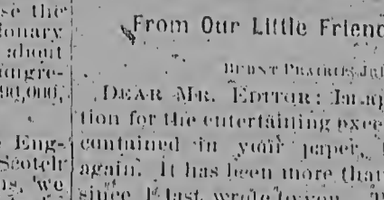
"I never thought before how many kinds of work, and how many different people, it takes to make even our commonest things," she added thoughtfully, when she told Aunt Annie what they had seen.

"And how easily any one of those people might spoil it all by doing carelessly his part of the work—the farmer with his grain, the miller with his flour, or the cook with her bread!" suggested auntie. "We do not often remember how many have had to be faithful before we could enjoy these common things; but it is worth thinking of sometimes."

"I know why!" said Fred suddenly. "There's a Bible verse in it: 'Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as unto the Lord, and not unto men.'"

Sabbath School Visitor.

A Snug House.



"In a river little horse
Lived a queer little man.
I shall tell one his name,
By and by, if you can."

But first I will tell you more about him, for I think he is one of the most curious little fellows I ever heard of; only he isn't really a man, you must know, but man and can rhyme so nicely that I call him so for short.

To begin with, his eyes, instead of being below his forehead, as any sensible man's would be, are on the end of two long spikes we will call them—so that he looks in that respect much as you would if your eyes were on the ends of two long fingers, and the other ends of the fingers were where your eyes are now. But that is not all, for these spikes are hollow, with something like a piece of tape running through them, to which the eyes are fastened, so that if the little man gets tired of wearing them in this conspicuous fashion he just pulls the tape, and instantly both spikes and eyes sink into his head and are seen no more—for awhile.

His ears are quite as curious, for, instead of being on his head, they are on his back, and what good they do him anyhow is a mystery, since he is dumb, and so would seem to have no use for ears.

But his mouth is the most singular of all, for his teeth are all on his tongue, and he has more than one hundred rows of them. I don't see, for my part, what he can want of so many, since he is a vegetarian, eating little except roots, leaves and vegetables, though I must admit that he does now and then vary his diet by eating up any of his relatives who happen to die. They don't die very easily, though, for if they lose both their eyes sticking out as they do, they are very apt to be injured, you know, or even lose their heads, they are only put to a little temporary inconvenience. They merely shut themselves up in their houses and go to sleep, and while they sleep their eyes or heads, as the case may be, will grow again as good as new.

This queer little man travels around wherever he chooses, yet not a leg does he possess. He has a foot, though, but only one, and that is apparently more for ornament than use, since he drags it along behind him as a rat does its tail.

He likes best to live in wet, muddy regions; and if it is very dry or cold he will not go out at all, but stay in his house, with every door fastened, and be "not at home" to all callers.

In the summer he is not at all fond of company; but as winter approaches he becomes more sociable, and, joining some of his numerous relatives, they all go to digging holes in the ground. Then they collect dead leaves, and such rubbish as they can pick up, prepare some comfort, and what do you imagine they do next? Why, they tumble their houses into these big holes they have dug, pull all the leaves, rubbish and ground down over them, and then crawl into bed and go to sleep, and there they all sleep till spring.

Now if I tell you that this mysterious man always carries his house around on his back, you will at once be able to tell the name of

"The gentleman
Who's queer little house."

WORKING FOR JESUS. A preacher in England was once talking about the heathen, and telling how much they needed Bibles to teach them Jesus. In the congregation was a little boy who became greatly interested. He wished to help buy Bibles for the heathen. But he and his mother were very poor; and at first he was puzzled to know how to raise the money.

Finally he hit upon a plan. The people in England are rubbing or door-stone polishing their hearth and securing their wooden floors. These stones are bits of marble or flagstone begged from the marble or stone-cutters or marble-workers.

This little boy had a favorite donkey named Neddie. He thought it would be nice to have Neddie help in the benevolent work. So he borrowed Jim's ring, and hauled him with stones, and went around calling:

"Do you want any door-stones?"

Before long he raised 15s.; and then he went to the minister and said: "Please, sir, send this money to the heathen."

"But, my dear little fellow, I must have a name to acknowledge it."

The lad hesitated, as if he did not understand.

"You must tell me your name," repeated the minister, "that we may know who gave the money."

"O well, then, sir, please put it down to Neddie and me; that will do, won't it, sir?"

CURE FOR LAZINESS.—The Dutch, it is said, have a singular contrivance to cure laziness. If a pauper, who is able, refuses to work, they put him into a deep cistern, and let in a sufficient of water. It comes in just so fast that by briskly plying a pump, with which the cistern is furnished, he keeps himself from drowning.

We now and then hear of boys and girls who would probably be benefited by having to take a turn at this pump. If this should meet the eye of one, we hope they will take a hint.

Address of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is recognized as the organ of three Annual Conferences—Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. Each one appoints three members to act as a Joint Publishing Committee, whose names appear on the fourth page of every issue of the ADVOCATE. By a failure to report to the editor the name of Rev. Christian Keener has been omitted in the weekly issue of the present year. He was, however, recognized as one of the representatives of the Louisiana Conference. The paper is the property of these three Conferences, and they are expected to take a lively interest in its management and prosperity.

The Publishing Committee met at the Seashore camp ground. Rev. E. Wadsworth, Rev. W. H. Watkins, Rev. J. G. Jones, Rev. J. Mathews, Rev. L. Parker and Rev. C. Keener were present. The publisher, Rev. R. J. Harp, was present also, and made an exhibit of the financial condition of the paper. Investigation was made by the committee, and the result is now submitted in this report to the Conferences.

Of the usefulness of the ADVOCATE as a vehicle of religious intelligence, and of valuable and profitable reading, it is not needful to speak much. It is presumed that this is acknowledged by all our preachers and by all the subscribers. It visits many families every week, and communicates knowledge of the doctrines and enterprises and movements of our branch of the church of Christ, which we judge to be of immense value. Its rank among the religious papers of the country is so elevated as to merit our commendation and to excite our admiration. Its weekly issue is now above eight thousand, and the prospect of a steady and large increase is very encouraging. It ranges largely through the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, and many of its issues are read in more distant States.

The publisher, Rev. R. J. Harp, merits and receives the hearty commendation of the committee for his untiring efforts to furnish an elegant and useful paper to all our people who subscribe thereto. He merits also our sympathy, as well as our commendation, because he patiently and willingly bears a burden which few men would bear, and he has done this for years, and continues to do it without any suitable remuneration, except that which arises from the consciousness that he is rendering very important service to the church and the country. The committee think that all our preachers ought to unite in earnest efforts to lighten this burden by diligence in collecting what is due on subscription, in getting new subscribers, and especially in prompt remittances.

Many of the preachers subject the publisher to embarrassment, of which they have no knowledge or intention, by retaining small sums of money in their possession until they can add to these small sums and make them larger. Hundreds and thousands of dollars are by this means kept out of his possession, sometimes for months, and he is forced to borrow money at high rates of interest to enable him to meet the current monthly expenses. This is especially and uniformly done in the months of August, September, October and November, because the preachers make arrangements to settle with him when they go to Conference. In these months the expenses very largely exceed the income, and he has to borrow large sums to keep the paper in operation. This is a grievous burden, and we earnestly urge all the preachers and subscribers to cease to impose it on him. Be prompt in your remittances, however small they may be. Consider how great a weight becomes when hundreds are making up each one a pound. To each individual, with his one pound, it is very small, but when all are put together in one lump the weight is intolerable. It is a small matter to each preacher and subscriber to pay $2, and on this account many put off payment, but to the publisher the aggregate is very large and very important. At this time there is a debt due to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, scattered over a large region in very small sums, which amounts in the aggregate to nearly $10,000. If this were paid—and it ought to be paid—the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE would be free from all embarrassment, and the publisher would receive a remuneration which he really deserves.

The editor, Rev. Dr. L. Parker, is esteemed and commended very highly by the committee because of his talents, taste and diligence. He sends out every week a paper which, in its editorials, selections and general appearance, is not excelled by any of those published elsewhere by the Methodist or any other church, and which in our judgment excels the larger number of them. The material used is of superior quality, and the printing very plain. This calls for much vigilance and diligence on the part of the editor, and we heartily commend him.

We earnestly advise all the preachers to use increased effort to enlarge the circulation of the paper. In doing so you will add much to your own usefulness among your congregations, and you will awaken and keep in operation a lively interest in the enterprises of the church. We very earnestly entreat every subscriber to pay all that he owes, and to do so immediately, and then see to it that he pay his subscription in advance so long hereafter as he shall continue to take the ADVOCATE.

Hortatory.

There used to be a class of licensed exhorters in our church. Exhorters were not technically regarded as preachers—not even as lay preachers—but as exercising gifts incitive rather than instructive. Perhaps they were not regarded as altogether equal to the task of expounding the word of God, or of explaining and defending the doctrines. They had not the training and learning which fit men for teachers, nor the time to prepare sermons. They were expected to talk to the people about religion, tell their experience, and urge home truths already familiar. They were extemporizers, of course, speaking from the heart, and adapting their words to the occasion and the exigencies of the moment.

It is to be regretted that the distinctive office of exhorter is falling into disuse, as there are many who have the qualifications, and who might do much good by exercising the excellent gift. It would be well for our preachers to lay more stress upon the hortatory element in preaching. It should now have proportionally more prominence than in any past period of our history. Through the Sunday schools, and by the abundant circulation of religious literature, the people are better instructed in the doctrines of the gospel than formerly. Doctrinal preaching and instruction should by no means be given up, but exhortation should accompany the interpretation and the exegesis, and that in large measure.

The preacher must aim to be an exhorter, and stir up this gift especially. We have observed in our revival meetings that the exhortation that follows the sermon seems to be the more effective, and that without it often no immediate results would probably have followed. Some men, who can preach well, have also the readiness and the versatility which enables them to follow another, or to close their own sermons with powerful and moving appeals. There are others who preach edifying sermons, but who, from supposed inability or neglect of their gifts, never venture beyond the exposition of the matter in hand. Exhortation is a gift to be desired and to be cultivated, for its great usefulness, and as necessary to the immediate salvation of souls. The best preacher may not be the best exhorter, but he can become effective in this way by properly estimating its importance, and by seeking after it as an excellence to be coveted by all.

The qualifications for exhortation are in some respects greater than those for preaching. The exhorter must have in excess unflinching courage, a strong will, great faith, a profound knowledge of the human heart, and a depth of spirituality and a fervor of zeal that kindles the whole man into a flame. The defects that disqualify for this exercise are not always in the temperament and the mental structure, but sometimes in the lack of faith, boldness and spirituality. As much as possible should the preacher become an exhorter. In other days exhorters grew into preachers, and exhortation was a splendid school for ministerial development, but now there is occasion to reverse the process. The preacher must grow into an exhorter. He begins by preaching, and he must become a finished preacher by becoming a good exhorter.

In preaching we sow the seed, in exhorting we reap the harvest. In the sermon we cast the net, in the exhortation we draw it to the shore. The Methodist type of preaching has always been distinguished by its warm, pungent, hortatory character. Its success has been greatly owing to this element. Let our young preachers remember this. While they aim to become preachers, master-builders, teachers and defenders of sound doctrine, let them also cultivate the gift of exhortation. Probably one reason that the later ministry of many is less fruitful is owing to the fact that they have ceased to be exhorters.

Faith that Works by Love.

Not by ordinances and forms are we to be saved, but by faith that worketh by love. Faith may be held without love, and it may produce results quite at variance with the meekness and gentleness of Christ. There has been but too often in the history of the visible church a faith that has worked by wrath rather than by love. Such was the faith of that class of the Jews who persecuted Christ and his apostles, and of Saul of Tarsus, that made him anxious to signalize his zeal for the faith of his fathers, even unto strange cities, by arresting and incarcerating all, both men and women, who believed Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ. These violent and cruel men believed in the being of "one God," in inspiration, and in a coming Christ; but it was a faith without love, and as such it only made them bigots, and intolerant of all whose convictions and beliefs differed from theirs. Men claiming to be the only true exponents of orthodoxy have in various lands and ages been able to hold their opinions in fellowship with insatiable rage and relentless cruelty, perpetrating deeds atrocious enough to turn the cheeks of darkness pale.

Then there has often been a faith that exhausts its whole energy in theorizing, talking, speculating, but never rose to the dignity and force of useful doing and holy living, but only the melody of a song whose sweetness perished in the viewless air.

There has been a faith that has worked only to the extent of an outward profession—that did not vitally unite to the vine, but only fastened the lifeless branch to it, and drew from it no life, no fruitfulness.

There has been a so-called faith that has not worked at all. Those who constitute this non-working class profess theoretically to hold all that the most consecrated hold, but their faith operates no result—no repentance, no searching the Scriptures, no prayer, no church connection, no self-denial, no holy activity, nothing, in fact. This is emphatically the "dead faith" of which St. James discourses. It is altogether vain and unprofitable.

The faith which saves, and leads to a holy life, is the faith that works by love. It is the distinguishing excellence of the religion taught in the Bible that it makes a holy life to grow out of the principles held by the real believer, who so trusts in Christ that he believes with a heart unto salvation. A real, vital Christianity, faith and good living are inseparable companions. The faith that is of the operation of God purifies the heart, and works by love. How beautiful, useful and gracious is such faith—faith that worketh by love! And love, we are told, worketh no ill to its neighbor—no ill to his person, to his fame, to his business nor to his fortune. But the faith that worketh by love is more than harmless, more than negatively good. By its example it provokes others to love and good works. It goes about, like the illustrious Example and Model of all goodness, doing good. If it "works," it is no inert and torpid thing, not a painted fire, but a glowing flame; not a cold and chiseled form, but a breathing, moving, loving life, whose every word is truth, whose every movement is acted love, and whose every aspiration is holiness and heaven.

Look at the fireside and the family altar, and see faith working by love! In the Sabbath school, in the prayer meeting, in the congregation and in the pulpit, and see faith working by love! See it in the sick-room, sympathizing and consoling; in the home of widowhood and want, extending relief. See it in the church extension, building for God; in the Bible and missionary meeting, voting supplies, and giving to send the word and man of God to all. See it in all the gentle tempers and loving ways of those "led by the Spirit." Let us ever pray: "Our Father, increase in us this faith that works by love."

Desires.

Desire, although prevalent in Christian experience, is but a half hope, and consequently in current conversation is not esteemed as of much force in a religious life. Its scriptural status, however, is of sufficient gravity to require a revision of this opinion. Its explanation is found in the law of growth, the Creator's own method for subjecting the entire circle of creature life in hope. Desire is a rational emotion in the experience of a creature who, like man, reaches his maturity by a regular development of inerense; and as in the physical, so in the spiritual this law holds in the progress of the soul toward its perfection. And while growth is the law, contentment is not possible, for less than perfection will not satisfy desire.

Desire is conceived to be insignificant only in contrast with knowledge and goodness. We often desire what we know not how to ask for; but this lack of definiteness is not cause for contempt. Desire follows a guidance more mysterious and not less sure than the light of knowledge. The stage of increase is never known to the desire that craves and waits for it. To think is a necessary operation of the mind; to desire is the natural expression of a soul subjected to conditions in hope.

We often desire more than we deserve. Our growth in grace does not keep pace with the ardor of desire. We do not feel deserving, and therefore regard desire as presumptuous; but it is the sense of need, and not of worth, that excites desire. We often desire what is altogether beyond our ability to reach. We have a lively sense of our spiritual needs, without the ability to provide for them. We discern in the Scriptures the rich economy of grace, without the knowledge to appropriate one measure of its fullness, and so give way to the feeling that desire is only an empty wish.

But the emotion in a state of mind excited by desire is vitally related to every actual increase in the work of salvation; for desire is appointed to indicate and support every gain that faith is privileged to acquire. It is the state of mind which the Holy Spirit finds most accessible to his influences, with which he can most readily coalesce, and concertedly lead man into the deeper experiences of a spiritual life.

The accessions which the Holy Spirit, by its inhabitation, brings to desire are indicated in the greater activity and ardency of desire, in its reachings outwardly and upwardly, and in its impetuous and unutterable urgency. It is a notification of the Spirit's agency in desire whenever it becomes groanings. It is also from the right source of inspiration when it fastens on deliverance from the bondage of corruption as the soul's most urgent need—a need over which desire broods with groanings unutterable. Desire separates to itself the promise of full salvation; and, holding to the divine word for support, counts all the increase needed thereto; hence it covers so many objects in this one end. In a close generalization, full salvation is conditioned upon faith solely; but desire is more free than logic, and touches everything that contributes to susceptibility and faith.

It is a further token of the Spirit's help in desire that the heart is searched by spiritual pains, testing its soundings, its fidelity and its trusts, discovering its idols, and separating its sins; for it is not under the unbearable light of his absolute holiness that the Lord searches the heart that desires, but under the intercessory guidance of the Holy Spirit, who accepts, purifies and interprets desire.

Holy desire has already received an infusion of the divine nature, and turns to the glorified state as its proper crown. Such a development of the present life is comprehended and striven for unduly by desire. No other emotion of our being is so familiar with sensations and glimpses of the life that is to be, "but which doth not yet appear;" and with the deeper work of grace that underlies this wonderful change, and the mightier faith that claims the blessing. A life of holy desire may be led by many who conceive of holiness as afar off and inaccessible—not aware that like as the mountain-top receives the first rays of the rising sun, so desire feels the first inspiration of the divine gift, and retains the impression longest.

DOUBLE U.

The Old Disciple.

The late Bishop Morris, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was a veteran soldier of the cross, and a Christian whose simple piety and great experience always gave weight to his religious opinions. In his last letter to the Cincinnati Conference, which was written only a few days before his death, at the close of full fourscore years, he said:

"I find the religion I so long preached to others is able to bring peace and assurance to the heart in retirement as well as in the heat of battle, leading forth the conquering hosts to certain victory. Thank God for the Christian's hope! It comforts and sustains amid all the vicissitudes of life, and to the trusting heart makes bright the future. In reviewing the past I have only to say that God has been very good to me. Most of my associates in the ministry, as well as many loved ones, have passed away. I yet linger on the shore, and soon expect to cross the river. I am nearing the Jordan, and in the course of nature cannot expect to stay here much longer; but beneath me are the everlasting arms, and through the riches of grace in Jesus Christ my Lord I hope to safely anchor in the harbor of eternal rest."

Testimonies like this are the best answer to the hopeless cavils and bitter opposition of the leaders of modern skepticism. But they have a special value to the long ranks of Christians whose hoary heads are crowns of glory, being found in the "way of righteousness." The number of old disciples is always great—always losing and always gaining. There is something exquisitely graceful in the old age which is rounded off like a globe upon which a good Providence has pictured the pathway of life's pilgrimage, and which turns upon its axis that we may see whatever is most worthy of remembrance and most beautiful in its season. There are saintly men and women now living near to God, and close to their eternal home, whose lives are overwhelming arguments for Christianity, and whom death will only release from earthly cares to enter upon heavenly service. There is also a majesty in such an old age which grows upon us as it quietly and unconsciously gets nearer to the throne of God, and bows there like a little child. Not always, indeed, do the infirmities of the old disciple permit this unruffled calm, but the grace that partly subdues them here will conquer them at last; and we think but little of the blemishes over which the transfiguring glory of Christ is already shining. When "the shock of corn cometh in its season," it is no longer green nor waving in the breeze. It is cut down and withered, but it is ripe and ready for the garner. And so the old disciple "cometh to his grave in a full age."

When the great reformer, Theodore Beza, was near the close of his great old age, he said of the ninety-first psalm: "That is my psalm. The Lord has fulfilled to me every one of its promises except the last part of the last verse, and for that I am waiting." "With long life will I satisfy him; and I will show him my salvation."

Aged ministers linger among their kindred and people like apostles ready for their crowns. Who can contemplate the career of such an one as the late Dr. Thomas De Witt, or that of Bishop McIlvaine, or of Dr. Gardiner Spring, and the finished course of good old Bishop Morris, without reverence for them and praise to God? Before such hoary heads we bow down with instinctive awe and Christian salutations; as we witness their departure we exclaim, like Elisha, at the ford of the Jordan: "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof."—Intelligencer.

The Minimum Christian.

The minimum Christian! And who is he? The Christian who is going to heaven at the cheapest rate possible. The Christian who intends to get all of the world he can, and not meet the worldling's doom. The Christian who aims to have as little religion as he may, without lacking it altogether.

The minimum Christian goes to church in the morning; and in the afternoon also, unless it rains, or is too warm or too cold, or he is sleepy, or has the headache from eating too much at dinner. He listens most respectfully to the preacher, and joins in prayer and praise. He applies the truth very judiciously, sometimes to himself, oftener to his neighbors.

The minimum Christian is very friendly to all good works. He wishes them well, but it is not in his power to do much for them. The Sabbath school he looks upon as an admirable institution, especially for the neglected and ignorant. It is not convenient, however, for him to take a class. His business engagements are so pressing during the week that he needs the Sabbath as a day of rest; nor does he think himself qualified to act as a teacher. There are so many persons better prepared for this important duty that he must beg to be excused. He is very friendly to home and foreign missions and colportage, and gives his mite. He thinks there are "too many appeals;" but he gives, if not enough to save his reputation, pretty near it; at all events, he aims at it.

The minimum Christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, the theater and card-playing, and large fashionable parties, give him much trouble. He cannot see the harm in this, or that, or the other popular amusement. There is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but that a man may be a Christian, and dance or go to the opera. He knows several excellent persons who do. Why should not he? He stands so close to the dividing line between the people of God and the people of the world that it is hard to say on which side of it he is actually to be found.

Ah, my brother, are you making this attempt? Beware, lest you find at last that, in trying to get to heaven with a little religion, you miss it altogether; lest, without gaining the whole world, you lose your own soul.—Presbyterian at Work.

The Duties of a Country Parson.

It is strange that, in country parishes at any rate, naturalists of the type of the Vicar of Selborne are more often met with. A clergyman's duties oblige him to spend so large a portion of his time in the open air that with a little trouble he can scarcely learn a great deal. Above all, by interesting the children of the parish in the marvelous mechanism of all living organizations, he might do much to check that cruelty to animals which arises more from ignorance and thoughtlessness than from an actual desire to inflict pain. A child could scarcely wish to kill wilfully after having seen its feet magnified, or to put out the eyes of a fly when it understood the beauty of their formation. The parson can often, like Waterton, clear the character of some of the animals which are destroyed, unconvicted of the crimes of which ignorance accuses them.

He may show that nature can beautifully balance things that she may sometimes be left to select for herself what is to live and what to die, that to destroy little birds is to encourage the ravages of insects, that crows amply pay for all the corn they eat, and that barn-door owls do not suck pigeons' eggs, but help the cats to protect the stack-yard from the attacks of field mice. There is scarcely anything which arouses a more healthy curiosity in children, or cultivates their intelligence in a better way, than teaching them to examine into the out-of-door things which they generally pass without notice.

A late famous naturalist, on going to a new parish, found the school in a deplorable state. The pupils seemed so dull and stolid that it was impossible to teach them anything. He made all sorts of plans for their improvement, but the bright idea struck him one day that he would take them out botanizing on their Saturday half holidays. The results of the experiments were miraculous, and, from learning to take an interest in the number of petals appertaining to each flower, they soon began to understand their multiplication table, and reading came of itself after they had been taught to use their eyes.

Pious people would no doubt be shocked if their pastor neglected Balaam's ass or Elisha's bears, and told the children of the Sunday school something about the robin redbreast that hopped around the door. The destruction of the Philistines' corn by Samson may be improving, but the little ones, we fear, would prefer to hear how the oak grows from the acorn, or what gives its color to the violet. It is said to think that an acquaintance with the anatomy of a pigeon's wing is not religious knowledge, although sound views about the plagues of Egypt are essential to orthodoxy.—London Saturday Review.

Theaters of Paris.

It is often said, says the New York Observer, that the religious press does not know the dramatic world, upon which it reflects with so much severity. It is well known that the drama of New York is mainly influenced in its tone and spirit by the French theater, and we give the impressions of Mr. George Ticknor, written in 1838, of the drama in Paris, which has not at all improved during the empire:

"The tone is decidedly lower, more immoral, worse than it was twenty years ago; and when it is recollected how much influence the drama exercises in France on public opinion, it becomes an important fact in regard to the moral state of the capital and country. The old French drama, and especially the comedy, from Molière's time downward, contains often gross and indelicate phrases and allusions, but the tone of the pieces, as a whole, was generally respectable. The recent theater reverses all this. It contains hardly any indecorous phrases or allusions, but its whole tone is highly immoral. I have not yet seen one piece that is an exception to this remark. The popular literature of the time, too, is in the same tone. Victor Hugo, Balzac, the shameless woman who dresses like a man and calls herself George Sand, Paul de Cock, and I know not how many more, belong to this category, and are daily working mischief throughout those portions of society to whom they address themselves. How is this to be explained? Is it that the middling class of society, that fills the smaller theaters and reads the romances of the popular writers, is growing corrupt; that the progress of wealth and even of education, has opened doors to vice as well as to improvement? I fear so; at any rate I know nothing more truly deserves the reproach of being immoral and demoralizing than the theaters of Paris and the popular literature of the day. It is all much worse than it was twenty years ago."

ILLUMINATING OILS
AND
AT REDUCED PRICES.
THE PUROLINE AND PORTABLE
GAS LIGHT CO.

Offer to the trade, at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES, the following list of their superior and popular brands:

INSURANCE OIL.

The Insurance Oil is the best Family Safety Oil, and is urgently recommended by all our Insurance Companies as a substitute for common Coal Oil or Kerosene. It may be used in ordinary lamps Without Change of Burner.

THE NEW ORLEANS BOARD OF UNDERWRITERS SAY:

"It is our opinion that the general use of the Insurance Oil would greatly reduce the number of lamp fires and explosions, and lessen the risk of destruction of life and property."

It will not explode or ignite in a lamp, and the present high rates of insurance will be reduced to place it within the reach of all classes of consumers, and make of the great FAMILY SAFETY OIL.

As an Illuminating Oil for family use, or for general use in ordinary Kerosene or Coal Oil lamps, the Insurance Oil has the indorsement of the New Orleans Board of Health, the Fire Commissioners, and all the American and European Insurance Agencies, as PERFECTLY SAFE.

Refined Carbon or Coal Oil.

THE WELL-KNOWN CROWN BRAND.—This is a pure, high test Kerosene or Coal Oil, generally known as the Crown Oil, and recommended to the trade, and to consumers, who buy CHEAP OILS as the best and safest of all the LOW-PRICED ILLUMINATING OILS in market. Its five years' experience has rendered from its use has never occurred. The Puroline and Portable Gas Light Company have the exclusive agency of the Crown Oil for the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas.

PUROLINE FLUID.

For Metallic Gas Lamps and Portable Gas Burners. Manufactured and sold only by the Puroline and Portable Gas Light Co. and their Agents.

This celebrated Fluid, prepared by a process known only to the proprietors, is the best and most reliable of all the products of Petroleum for use in Metallic, Portable Gas Lamps and Lanterns. It burns clear and bright as tree from smoke or unpleasant odor, and does not char the wick or clog the burner. No other fluid or oil should be used in Portable Gas Lamps or Lanterns.

Puroline is especially recommended for use in Portable Gas Lamps and Chandeliers, in Street Lanterns, Sugar-House Lamps, Dime Shed Lanterns, and in Torches and Gas Burners for Steamboat Landings, Moonlight Picnics and Street Processions. Giving a light equal to the best city Coal Gas. It enables the people of the remotest villages to illuminate their Stores, Warehouses, Saloons, Hotels, Churches, Streets and Gardens as brilliantly as the favored residents of a great metropolis.

Gasoline for Gas Machines.

Distilled expressly for the Puroline and Portable Gas Light Company, and with peculiar regard to the changes of temperature, so common in this climate. Unequaled for generating gas, of high carbureting qualities.

Proprietors, patentees, and owners of Gas Machines cannot overestimate the importance of having their Gasoline of reliable gravity and quality, as success depends so much on these conditions.

MEDICAL.

A STRING OF PEARLS!

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1872:

I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies.

Hon. Alex. H. Stephens has greatly improved in health of late.—The State Line Press, West Point, Ga.

Testimony of the Chief Justice of Georgia.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for constipation of my bowels, caused by a temporary derangement of the liver, for the last three or four years, and always, when used according to the directions, with decided benefit. I think it is a good medicine for the derangement of the liver, at least such has been my personal experience in the use of it.—Hiram Warner, Chief Justice of Georgia.

Opinion of the Clergy.

Simmons' Liver Regulator is certainly a specific for that class of complaints which it claims to cure. Many of our fellow-beings are suffering from hepatic disorders, and have doubts in relation to the efficacy of this popular preparation, we can only offer them the simple and candid argument of Philip to Nathaniel: "Come and see." Try the proposed remedy, and then you can judge for yourselves.—Rev. David Wills, Pastor of Presbyterian Church, Macon, Ga.

Always Keep It On Hand.

I have used Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator myself, and in my family for years, and pronounce it one of the most satisfactory medicines that can be used. Nothing would induce me to be without it, and I recommend it to my friends, if they want to secure health, to always keep it on hand.—R. L. Moff, Columbus, Ga. (Congressman.)

CAUTION!

Buy no Powders or Prepared Simmons' Liver Regulator unless in our engraved wrapper, with trade mark, stamp and signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Tomato Culture.

In our observation of gardening we have found very few people who got the best results out of their tomato plants. Either they were selected without knowledge, or the supposition that there is not much choice in varieties, or they were allowed to lay on the ground and have their fine flavor spoiled, or the vines were left unpruned to sprawl over several square feet of room, and waste their energies in producing dwarfed fruit and useless stalks and blossoms until frost came.

Now there is just as much difference between a large, solid, smooth-fleshed tomato, and a little, wrinkled combination of seeds, water and skin, as there is between your grandmother's apple dumpling and one that you buy at the corner grocery. We have raised a dozen varieties in one season, and never found anything better than the Eureka and Trophy, though the General Grant was good—during the "first term." Some sorts will degenerate, like the potato. The plants should be stocky, and well seasoned to the air, before setting out. In most soils they should be set deep—half way up the stem; indeed the Jersey gardeners put them in nearly up to the first leaf, as they stand dry weather better. It is an exploded notion that they do not need a rich soil. If well fed they will grow rankly, to be sure; but the pruning shears will take care of that. The most vigorous plants will give the greatest weight and best quality of fruit. Cultivating, to keep the soil loose and free from weeds, does the young plants almost as much good as it does cabbages.

But it is from lack of training and trimming that the most failures are made. For garden culture we believe the single stake system the best, though frames will answer; and it is a good plan to let some plants lie low, on bushes or sticks, as in very dry seasons they do well. As in our short season early tomatoes are desirable, select half a dozen of your best and earliest blossoming plants for forcing; tie them loosely with large twine to a stake, four feet high; as soon as the first cluster of blossoms appears pinch out the upward-tending stem—nip all the lateral branches that start out from time to time above the leaves; in short, concentrate all the growth of the plants into one cluster of fruit, and you will have ripe tomatoes two or three weeks earlier than would otherwise be the case. And nearly all plants should be treated after the same fashion, though not so severely pruned. We have trained a plant of the "Trophy" five feet high, to a stout stake, having cross-pieces; it bore a cluster of fruit to each foot—the bottom one containing twenty-three tomatoes, mostly of large size (one of them weighing over a pound), which began to ripen on the twentieth of July. By the stake or frame system the fruit is kept cleaner, has better ventilation, ripens more evenly, and is better flavored.

The usual fault in trimming tomatoes consists in cutting off leaves which should never be done, or nipping the ends of lateral branches after they have grown. The plant should be kept clean of lateral sprouts from the first. They are, in our climate, mere robbers, unless you are after a yield of green fruit.—Golden Rule.

A HOME-MADE CARPET.—An Eastern lady says: Have any of you a spare bed-chamber, seldom used, which you would like to carpet at little expense? Go to the paper-hanger's store and select a paper looking as much like a carpet as you can find. Having taken it home, first paper the floor of your bed-room with brown paper or newspaper. Then over this or these put down your wall-paper. A good way to do this will be to put a good coat of paste upon the width of the roll of paper and the length of the room, and then lay down, unrolling and smoothing at the same time. When the floor is all covered, then size and varnish; only dark glue and common furniture varnish may be used, and the floor will look all the better for the darkening these will give it. When it is dry put down a few rugs by the bedside and before the toilet table, and you have as pretty a carpet as you could wish—a carpet, too, that will last for years, if not subject to constant wear, and at a trifling expense. I myself used a room one entire summer prepared in this way—used it constantly—and when the house was sold in the fall the purchaser asked me to take up the oil cloth, as he wished to make some alterations which would be sure to injure it.

HOW TO COOK A TERRAPIN.—Put him in boiling water for five minutes, to loosen the skin; then take him out, skin him, and replace him in the hot water. When the claws become soft it is sufficiently boiled. Take him out and remove the bottom shell first, cut off the head and claws, and take out the gall and sand-bag, then cut up the remainder. Cut the entrails into pieces about half an inch. Be careful to preserve all the juice. Put a piece of yeast, pepper, salt, a little of all, yolk of five hard boiled eggs, a third of a pint of the very best butter, a proper proportion of salt, red pepper, and a large quantity of rich cream. All of the ingredients to be of the best. Dish promptly, and serve smoking hot. The cover to a pie is the best to dish furnishing eggs which are a great addition. Some persons have been known to season with spices—but this is not to the fastidious epicure.

A writer in the London Field and Farm News says: "It is not unfortunate, generally known that in the event of fire in buildings containing horses, if the latches be merely lifted however roughly the doors may be, the horses will leave the burning stables without difficulty. A knowledge of this fact may be the means of saving many a valuable animal from a horrible death."

Improved Eagle Cotton Gins.

PRICES REDUCED.

The great reputation of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established by the well known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best-built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will testify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only ten-inch cylinders, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in large-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand mahin gins.

The bale of cotton which received the grand prize at St. Louis and has won so many thousands of dollars at numerous fairs, was ginned by the Eagle Cotton Gin.

Prices Have Been Greatly Reduced.

All orders should be addressed to

GENERAL MARKET.

Owing to the continued good health of the city many persons are visiting us, and sales in nearly all departments of business are above the average for this season of the year, and croakers hold their tongues, for facts prove them wrong; while the steady march of the clear-headed, energetic, enterprising men among us convinces even the chronic fault-finders that New Orleans is to-day moving out of her recent thralldom, and ere old winter shakes his hoary locks at us the evidence of our prosperity will be apparent to the world.

Non possum bath avoir,
Sed I shall kiss Amanda Ann,
Theo Kate and I have war.

Amanda habet argent coin,
Sed Kate has arrass curls;
Et both sunt very agathal;
Eh quite formosae girls.

Enfin, the youthful anthropos,
Philon the duo ovalis,
Resolved proponere to Kate
Avant set evening's shades.

Proceedens thro od Kate's domen,
It trauve Amanda there,
Kate quite forgot his late resolves,
Both sunt so goodly fair.

Sed smiling, on the new-lapis,
Between inethus twain,
Cupit to tell his flame to Kate,
Pains the poetique strain.

Mals, glancing ever and anon,
At fair Amanda's eyes,

Each virgo heard the gental vow,
With cheeks as rouge as wine;
And offering each a milk white hand
Bulk whispered: "Ich bin dein."

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—The following order has been issued:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 15, 1876.

General W. T. Sherman, Commanding United States Army:

SIR—The House of Representatives of the United States, on the tenth instant, passed the following preamble and resolutions, viz.:

The following is the resolution referred to:

"The right of suffrage prescribed by the constitution of the United States is subject to the fifteenth amendment, and that the service of said rights should be faithfully maintained and observed by the United States, and that it is asserted that the exercise of said right is denied in some States, notwithstanding the efforts of good citizens, controlled by fraud, intimidation and violence, so that the object of the fifteenth amendment is defeated; and that all citizens, without distinction of race or color, are entitled to the rights conferred by said amendments, and declaring that all attempts, by force, fraud, terror, intimidation or otherwise, to prevent a free exercise of the right of suffrage should meet with certain, condign and effectual punishment, and that in many cases which have heretofore occurred, or may hereafter occur, in which violence or murder has been or shall be committed by one race or class upon another, prompt punishment of the criminal or criminals is imperatively demanded; whether the crime be one punishable by fine or imprisonment, or one demanding the punishment of death."

The question was divided. The declaration or resolution was carried, 74 to 2, and the preamble by 121 to 41.

The President directs that, in accordance with the spirit of the above, you are to hold all the available force under your command, not engaged in subduing the savages of the Western frontier, in readiness to be used upon the call or requisition of the proper authorities, for protecting all citizens, without distinction of race, color or previous condition, in the exercise of the right to vote, as guaranteed by the fifteenth amendment, and to assist in the enforcement of certain, condign and effectual punishment upon all persons who shall attempt, by force, fraud, terror, intimidation or otherwise, to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage, as provided by the laws of the United States, and have such force so distributed and stationed as to be able to render prompt assistance in the enforcement of the law. Such additional orders as may be necessary to carry into the purpose of these instructions will be given from time to time after consultation with law officers of the government.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

PHILADELPHIA, August 16.—The Italian frigate Victor Emanuel, arrived at this port this morning. She exchanged salutes with the receiving ship Pototmac. A large class of cadets are on board, who propose visiting the International Exposition during their stay in the city.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 15. On Sunday and Monday last a terrible rain storm visited Tallahatchie county, Miss., destroying all crops along the creeks and bottoms, and sweeping away levees and bridges. Many farmers lose their entire crops. The loss is estimated at $50,000.

ATLANTA, Aug. 16.—At the annual celebration of the DeKalb Sunday School Association to day there were six thousand persons present. Mr. Cobbin offered a resolution inviting the action of the State Sunday School Convention by inviting the International Sunday School Convention to meet in Atlanta in 1877. The resolution was unanimously adopted.

COLUMBIA, Aug. 16.—The State democratic convention, in secret session all day, decided to nominate a state ticket. The doors were opened at 6 P. M., and Wade Hampton was unanimously nominated for Governor, and the convention adjourned sine-die to-morrow.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—At a meeting of the manufacturers of sewing silk and machine twist it was resolved, on account of the high price of raw material, to advance the price twenty-five per cent. on all classes of silk manufactured for the trade.

RICHMOND, Aug. 17.—Gen. Sheridan has sent the following dispatch to Gen. Sherman: "The following is the latest reliable information from Gen. Crook:

"'Camp Brown, Aug. 14.—A Shoshone Indian came in to-day. He left Crook on the tenth instant, well down on Tongue river, and thinks Gen. Crook struck the Sioux village on the eleventh or twelfth instant. Small parties are annoying the troops, burning grass, etc.

J. MIX, Captain.'"

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 17.—Gov. Villagrania, of Lower California, telegraphs to the Mexican consul in this city that there is a general uprising of the Indians along the Colorado river and in the adjoining country against the Mexicans. Gov. Villagrania is en route to San Diego, in this State, to procure arms and munitions of war. He declares the situation is critical.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—A dispatch was received here to-night by the wife of Dr. Pope, Mr. Kerr's physician, announcing the death of Speaker Kerr, at Rockbridge Alum Springs, this morning at half-past seven o'clock.

A casket will be sent from this city to Rockbridge Alum Springs to-morrow morning, in which the remains of the late speaker will be conveyed to his late home at New Albany, Ind. There will be no official ceremonies at Rockbridge, though it is probable that several members of Congress will attend the remains to New Albany. There is a very general expression of sorrow here at the sad though not unexpected news.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—Secretary Chandler, and not Gen. Sherman, it seems, is to have command of the Federal forces in the South until after the November election. Chandler is already beginning to receive applications from Southern Republicans who want troops, and the pressure promises to be very great. Chandler, as chairman of the Republican Executive Committee, is to have full sway, and to use the full powers of the government to district to carry the doubtful States.—Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—There were frosts last night at Port Jervis, N. Y., and Milford, Pa.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, Aug. 16.—The steamer City of Mexico arrived from Mexico, bringing the following news from the city of Mexico to August 5:

The political situation remains unchanged. No important events have taken place since the sailing of the British steamer on the second.

Government organs predict the near termination of the rebellion. The revolutionists continue powerless, and are divided into small factions, this being their point of strength, thereby harassing the government troops and keeping up alarm.

Business is paralyzed throughout the country.

The government is sorely pressed for means to meet its war expenses.

The death of W. Lemoix, agent of the Pacific steamship line and vice consul of the United States at Acapulco, is reported from that place.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The war party at Belgrade is gaining strength. Our account of recruits from Russia and other points, and the growing impression is that one great power at least will adhere to Servian fortunes. The Turks are delaying operations to give an opportunity for peace propositions, but they will have to win another battle.

LONDON, Aug. 18. Mr. Plimsoll has been presented with a memorial silver cup by the workmen of a large Sheffield firm.

A correspondent of the Daily News, in a letter, dated Philippopolis, August 9, says: The Turkish report of outrages in Bulgaria is such a tissue of impudent falsehoods that it calls for the protest of Mr. Baring, British legation, and Mr. Schuyler, of the American legation at Constantinople.

The Turkish authorities are doing nothing to restrain the Mohammedan population. Armed Turks continue to commit acts of violence daily. The Christian inhabitants are robbed if they go outside of their villages. Women are assaulted and violated every day. The Turks drive away cattle and sell them. The suffering of the Christian people is very great, and immediate relief is needed.

The same correspondent writes on the tenth that three thousand men, women and children were killed by the Turks at Otulkeui. The children were carried about impaled on bayonets, and human beings were burned alive.

At Bazardjik a thousand persons were killed.

LONDON, Aug. 21.—The Roman correspondent of the Standard says: A telegram from Athens announces that an insurrection was broken out at Sethno, in Crete. Ahmed Eyoula Pacha left Gurzunovatz and returned to Granada, from Granada here, then toward Alexinatz.

His vanguard attacked three Servian battalions on Friday, and drove them to the Azren mountains. His headquarters are now ten miles from Alexinatz, which, with Belgrade, will surely fall.

A dispatch to the Daily News from Algxinatz reports that after driving in the Servian outposts on Saturday All Saib Pacha pressed toward Tessien; the cannonading was heavy and the fighting obstinate. The Servians withstood the assault, and the Turks began to retreat in the afternoon; the Servians followed, driving them across the frontier.

THE GENERAL MINUTES.

We have had no little trouble in procuring returns from the Annual Conferences to make up the General Minutes. We have taken great pains to secure correctness—writing letters to procure statistics, adding up, correcting and verifying all the figures, so that they may be depended upon as far as the returns are trustworthy. We are sorry to say that some of the reports are imperfect—e. g., those of baptisms, especially of infants. We hope our pastors will pay more attention to this subject, and report not only all they baptize themselves, but all who are baptized by others within the bounds of their respective pastoral charges. There were moneys contributed to the cause of missions which passed into the treasury besides what went through the Annual Conferences, which are not reported in the General Minutes. We must put forth greater efforts in the cause of missions. The delay in issuing the minutes has been beyond the editor's control. We hope all our friends—especially all our ministers—will procure copies of this highly suggestive manual. We thank God most devoutly for the gratifying increase in our ranks. We append

The transferred preachers are reckoned with those of the Conferences to which they now belong. The preachers who were discontinued this year, and those who were located—14 are of course included with the traveling preachers, though many of them are also reckoned with the local preachers. The colored members in the Indian Mission Conference are reported with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, organized by our Bishops in the early part of the year in connection with the work of our Missions; hence the apparent decrease in that department.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Centennial Notes.

GOING TO PHILADELPHIA.

MR. EDITOR: On the first train after I had deposited my vote for Democratic rule in Alabama, accompanied by my daughter, I started for the Centennial. At Selma I was met by Rev. A. D. McVoy, conducting a party of nice girls and ladies from Selma and vicinity. I found him as well qualified to travel and to entertain companions as we know him to be to manage a college for girls. Here we took the cars for Philadelphia, via Dalton, Bristol, Lynchburg, Washington city and Baltimore, to return via New York, Niagara, Cleveland, O., Cincinnati, Louisville and Nashville, paying $31 for single tickets.

The crops from Selma to Dalton are very good wherever they have been well worked, and provisions will be plentiful and cheap.

The country around Rome, Ga., exhibits more evidences of improvement than any country along the route from Selma to Lynchburg. The lands are well cultivated and preserved, the crops and grasses look luxuriant, the houses and fences are constructed with taste as well as with adaptation to convenience and durability, and the people stir about with activity and an air of resolutoness not seen in many other places of greater pretensions to commercial and agricultural importance.

The country from Knoxville to Lynchburg is beautiful beyond the power of description. How refreshing to Gulf State people to have a view of the hills and valleys and streams of such a country, all bordered with grass and trees of lively green! Everything looks so much greener, so much cooler, than the landscape of our section.

The corn of east Tennessee is very fine, much better than that of Virginia. The hay crop of east Tennessee and of Virginia, judging from the stacks in the fields and the quantity in the barns, is immense, and the fields are now ready for a second mowing. I noticed several steam threshers in the wheat fields of Virginia, near Salem.

The olden houses of the valley of Virginia near Lynchburg must soon be torn down and be succeeded by a better style of architecture; and then, with its fertile soil, pure air, splendid scenery and improved residences, it will be one of the most desirable as well as one of the most profitable farming regions of the United States. The old owners have neither the pride nor the taste necessary to do this. The younger people will move things up with the spirit and arts of the age.

The tobacco crop of Virginia along my route is quite inferior. The plant is small and the stand much broken.

From the number of bar-room signs at all the depots in Virginia, and the appearance of the many persons "hanging around" them, I infer that intemperance is still one of the prevailing vices of the Old Dominion.

At Washington there are many things of interest to visitors of any class. The treasury building, on account of its size and money-making operations, is the most popular resort of visitors. The sight of money is very fascinating even to persons who know they will never handle any of it, either to clip or stamp or sign it. There are, I was informed, nearly one thousand persons employed, or engaged in this department. Great vigilance is exercised to keep the subordinates and visitors from stealing the money. They are watching the smaller bills and neglecting the large ones, if the charges and hints about the chief officers are not much exaggerated.

The government botanical garden has the best display of plants of rare quality I have ever seen. The grounds are well planned and most tastefully ornamented. The hot-houses are conveniently constructed for use and for favorable show of plants, and the defiance could be safely ventured that there is no flower or bush or tree of beauty, use or rarity in the known world not represented in this garden. I noticed, among others of reputed rarity and of strange appearance, the paper plant from Egypt, the Croton oil plant from the Cape of Good Hope, the cinnamon and date from the East Indies, and other curious vines and trees from Japan, Ceylon, Mexico, Honduras, Guatemala, Australia, Malay, Russia, and every other known country. And these beautiful plants were brought from those countries, and not propagated from seeds or cuttings.

The capitol at Washington is the finest building in the world, all things considered. The material is of the finest quality; is huge and massive where needed, and is most handsomely carved at all points of illustration. The new wing additions, though of the same architectural style, and harmonious with the central building, are improvements in many respects.

The public library is immense, and well arranged, both for show and use. The statuary and paintings are the best executions of the greatest masters of those arts. The dome of the capitol is the most magnificent part of the building, and is most beautifully embellished from the floor of the rotunda to the apex, where, after easy ascension, you can have the most extended, picturesque and varied views I have ever enjoyed.

I was in both houses of Congress by invitation from Congressmen Lewis, of Alabama, and Riddle, of Tennessee, and Senator Cooper, of Tennessee, all friends of my earlier life. They are politicians of promise, and, better still, all Christian gentlemen. There are many very ordinary men, and a fair proportion, I fear, of corrupt men, in both houses of Congress.

We were introduced to the President, who received us very pleasantly. He looks well, and presents none of those indications of dissipation or mental aberration spoken of by reporters for the press.

A ride of six hours through portions of Maryland and Delaware brought us to the city of "Brotherly Love."

Letter from Arkansas.

MR. EDITOR: The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has some friends in this distant locality, and they are always glad to welcome its arrival.

We belong to the Little Rock Conference, and our town of Arkadelphia is situated about ninety miles southwest of the capital, on the St. Louis and Iron Mountain railroad. We are within thirty-six hours' communication of Galveston, seventeen hours of St. Louis and twelve hours of Memphis. The population numbers quite two thousand, and is in the midst of one of the most fertile, healthy and pleasant portions of the State. The surrounding country is in an encouraging financial condition. The people are not rich, but are enjoying that prosperity which is the result of industry, economy and frugality. They are mostly out of debt, have plenty of food and raiment, and the great majority of them are sound and earnest Methodists.

Hot Springs is only twenty-four miles northwest of us, but at one time, I am informed, that celebrated Bethesda came near being moved here. Of course it was the scheme of an enterprising Yankee. He had the ground surveyed, the elevations and depressions, the heights and depths all calculated, and was to bring the waters here, sub terra, in metallic pipes, and with no reduction of temperature. Unfortunately for us, the suit pending between the United States and its citizen claimants paralyzed the enterprise. Thus near came Arkadelphia of being what Hot Springs is, and Hot Springs of what Arkadelphia then was; though we still have a town of active people, a healthy public sentiment and a sound moral tone. We have four well-organized and well-conducted Protestant churches, viz.: Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Episcopalian, standing in influence and importance in the order named. Our pastorate is far above the average in places of similar size, and the cause of God prospers.

About the only evidence of activity and enterprise now to be observed in the erection of one of the largest and most imposing Methodist churches in the State. Its spire is one hundred and ten feet high, and the building capable of accommodating four hundred persons. It is an ornament to the town and an honor to the congregation. We are pushing it forward to absolute completion in structure and finances, so as to be ready for dedication by Bishop Keener at the approaching session of our Annual Conference. It is but just to state that the building of this church is due, in a great measure, to the zeal and energy of our pastor, Rev. C. F. Evans, formerly of New Orleans. Bro. Evans has a membership of two hundred, and a flourishing Sunday school, numbering one hundred pupils. He is an able and zealous preacher. He preaches the truth and defends the truth, relishing and evincing at all times the warm heart of evangelism.

An Impostor.

MR. EDITOR: Last fall one T. P. W. White presented to the Quarterly Conference of Downsville circuit, Louisiana Conference, a certificate as a local preacher from the presiding elder of the Fort Smith district, Arkansas Conference. Upon said certificate he was received, and his license renewed at the fourth Quarterly Conference. He was subsequently married to a very excellent young lady, the daughter of a widow. A short time since a letter was received from Bro. Granade, the presiding elder of Fort Smith district, Arkansas Conference, with information that said T. P. W. White had deserted a wife in Arkansas, and that he was only an exhorter in our church there, and he had no certificate or license as local preacher, unless they were forged. This information was immediately given to said White, and he was notified to attend an investigation, upon which he White left the country.

The Quarterly Conference of the Downsville circuit on last Saturday declared him expelled from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He has his forged license, with my signature upon it as having been renewed. I take this method of informing the public of these facts, and warning them against so base a man. He traveled under the character of a Methodist preacher as he went out of the country; said he had been a member of the Louisiana Conference, but his horse died last fall, and he was compelled to locate. He was traveling on foot, and our members and friends took their horses and sent him on his way. He was proposing to preach to the people on his way. He has a blemish in one eye; I think it is entirely out. I would judge him to be about twenty-five or twenty-six years old.

Education.

The following is the report of the Committee on Education to the Shreveport District Conference, Red River chapel:

We as a church believe that ignorance is the source of a large portion of the evils and misery in the land, and therefore have always labored to promote the cause of education.

We are sorry that we can report but one single Methodist school on the district; but that one—the Mansfield Female College—is located in an eligible and healthy position, and is in a prosperous condition. The president, Rev. Thomas Armstrong, is an efficient school man, with a suitable corps of teachers. This institution of learning stands a head and shoulders above any other in northwest Louisiana. Yet many of our people are sending their daughters away from home, and to schools of other denominations. Mansfield Female College gives a rare benefit to the daughters of the traveling preachers of the Louisiana Annual Conference, and it should be appreciated by them; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the preachers of the Louisiana Conference, and officials of the church, use every laudable means of turning the tide of patronage to this institution.

HOW MUCH I OWE.

When this passing world is done,
When has sunk yon glaring sun,
When we stand with Christ in glory,
Looking o'er life's finish'd story,
Then, Lord, shall I fully know—
Not till then—how much I owe.

When I stand before the throne
Dress'd in beauty not my own,
When I see thee as I ought,
Love thee with unsinning heart,
Then, Lord, shall I fully know—
Not till then—how much I owe.

When the praise of heaven I hear,
Loud as thunders to the ear,
Loud as many waters' noise,
Sweet as harp's melodious voice,
Then, Lord, shall I fully know—
Not till then—how much I owe.

Even on earth, as through a glass
Darkly, let thy glory pass,
Make forgiveness feel so sweet,
Make thy Spirit's help so meet,
Even on earth, Lord, make me know
Something of how much I owe.

Chosen not for good in me,
Wakened up from wrath to flee,
Hidden in the Saviour's side,
By the Spirit sanctified,
Teach me, Lord, on earth to show
By my love, how much I owe.

The Baptists and Religious Liberty.

Mr. Editor: To those who have looked into the historical facts of one hundred years ago, the self-glorification of the Baptists during this centennial year is really amusing. To hear their centennial addresses and read their centennial fulminations one would suppose that, but for the influence of the Baptists during the Revolutionary struggle, our forefathers would never have gained their independence. All over the South these would-be champions of religious liberty are trying to convince the people that all other churches owe the Baptist Church a debt of gratitude for the religious liberty they enjoy to-day. We believe that the time has come when these claims should be met by an appeal to the historical facts which no intelligent man will call in question. In this appeal to the records we shall confine ourselves to standard authorities—men who were "selected to write Baptist history because of their ability, and who had access to the original records of the early Baptist churches in this country," and some of whom "spent forty years in this work."

Drs. Backus, Cramp, Benedict, and all the old Baptist chroniclers, agree in stating that the first Baptist church in this country was organized by Roger Williams in 1639; and yet as late as 1768, a period of one hundred and twenty-nine years, there had not been organized a Baptist church in the State of Vermont or New Hampshire. Up to 1741, a period of one hundred and two years, there were only nine Baptist churches in Massachusetts. And up to 1775, about the beginning of the war, there were only two Baptist congregations in the State of Vermont.—See Dr. Backus' History, 1, 152 s.

Dr. Cramp, page 471, says: "In 1688, the Baptist denomination in North America comprised thirteen churches"—that is, the Baptists had organized thirteen churches on this continent in forty-one years. That looks like "turning the world upside down!"

As to Virginia, Mr. Benedict says: "In 1768, only eight years before the Declaration of Independence, there were but ten Baptist churches in all parts of Virginia;" and he adds: "The first appearance of the denomination in this country excited no alarm; most of their converts were from that class of people who were of but a small account in society; their preachers were unlearned, generally illiterate; their assemblies and their efforts were in places remote, and obscure."—Page 611. No wonder they multiplied so slowly!

From 1740 to 1770 Dr. Cramp, in speaking of the entire church, says: "A sad degeneracy had taken place among the General Baptists. . . . Arianism had crept in among them, and with it certain other errors. The loss of life followed the obscuration of light. Anti-evangelical sentiments prevailed to such an alarming extent that the sounder part of that denomination felt the necessity of withdrawing. They peaceably withdrew in 1770, and formed the 'New Connection of General Baptists.' . . . The new body thus constituted is now the General Baptist denomination, the Arianized churches having fallen, for the most part, into Socinianism, or become extinct." Page 498. "In the year 1790 the number of churches was thirty-seven, with less than three thousand members." Page 527. Think of it! "In North America" the Baptists, at the end of one hundred and one years, numbered "thirty-seven churches, and less than three thousand souls!" Remember, this was in 1790, only thirty-six years before the Declaration of Independence!

Now bear in mind that from 1740 to 1770 Dr. Cramp says that "a sad degeneracy had taken place." That Arianism, with certain other errors, had crept in among them; that the obscuration of light was followed by a loss of life; that this state of things continued up to 1770," when "they peaceably withdrew and formed the 'New Connection.'" In this state of things it is mere presumption to suppose that they, as a church, made much headway from 1740 to 1770. Yet in 1740 all the Baptists, including both men and women, on this continent were "less than three thousand"—how much less the historian did not tell us!

Now I make this point: Is it not ridiculous to hear men talk of such a church as that—with her small numbers and limited resources, with her record of errors and general social position, with her loose discipline and want of spiritual "life," with her disjointed government (every local church being an independent sovereignty) with no court of appeal—is it not ridiculous to hear men talk about such a church as that wielding the influence in the Revolutionary struggle which is claimed for her during this centennial year?

At the time of the Revolutionary war the "Baptist denomination" was confined mainly to the New England States; and every tyro in American history knows that "it was in New England that blue lights were burned, and defeat and disaster overtook the American army!" "It was Rhode Island the stronghold of the Baptists for one hundred and thirty years that did more to defeat American independence than any State in the colonial government?" Yet the Baptists would have us believe that they have all the glory of giving this land the boon of civil and religious liberty! If their claims, set up all over the South this year, are true, then the Centennial Exposition will be sadly defective unless the "pool in which Roger Williams and Ezekiel Holliman baptized each other" is on exhibition! What an oversight that some Baptist Church did not think to appoint a centennial agent to attend to this matter! If this centennial passes without the immortal Roger being canonized, I fear that before another centennial jubilee rolls around our good Baptist brethren will try to go back on Bro. Roger and his big baptism, especially if they can get rid of such historians as Drs. Backus, Benedict and Cramp.

"A church that assumes the right to settle the mode of baptism for nine-tenths of the Christian world, and refuses to communion with all who do not accept her arbitrary decision—a church that will expel one of its members for receiving the sacrament at the hands of the minister under whose preaching he was converted—a church that will expel one of its members for joining another Christian church from conscientious motives—a church whose laws are so tyrannical that none of its members can get out of its fold except by death or expulsion—a church that has no court of appeal for an injured member—a church that has stirred up more strife in the religious world than all the other churches put together—such a church as that is the last church in the world to raise a stir about religious liberty during this centennial year!"

Now as our Baptist friends have raised this question, I hope it will lead our people to read up the history of religious liberty. Those who want a sample of the facts in the case can get it by sending to Dr. A. H. Redford, Nashville, Tenn., for a copy of "Baptist Pretensions, by the Rev. B. F. Sedwick"; price, 15 cents. Let all our pastors see that this pamphlet is circulated among our people.

Awakened Memories.

Mr. Editor: In your paper of the tenth instant, occupying a place in "Our Young People's" corner, there is a letter written by Miss Alice Cary Sadler. The reading brings vividly to my mind both sad and pleasant memories. Will you permit me to relate them?

Early in June, 1863, Maj. William Bosworth and lady, of Fort Pike, visited the home of this writer, near this city. We had known Mrs. Bosworth from childhood. Before her marriage she was for several years a member of our family, at that time without known kin. Upon her arrival she was very ill, and said she had come to die among us; had no fear of death; was prepared and ready to go. Medical aid was called, but in vain; the time of her departure was at hand. She passed over, borne in triumph, with a shout of victory from her lips and a glorious illumination upon her face. Her remains sweetly and silently rest in our family cemetery. The writer and wife accompanied the major back to his then desolate home, in order to administer comfort to his wounded heart.

Shortly after our arrival, early in July, at the fort we were visited by the occupant of Grand Coquille Island, and Mr. Wegus—the same person, I presume, mentioned by Miss Sadler. He informed us of a meeting then in progress a few miles up Pearl river, and proposed to carry me to the place as a help to its success. Soon we were across the Rigolets, and at his house, from which, drawn by his fast trotter, we were soon making way for our destination, some fourteen miles distant. Arriving just as a Bro. McNabb was beginning the evening service, my friend Weems hastened into the house; brought out a Bro. Shelton, the circuit preacher, when an introduction and explanation followed. Very quickly Bro. Shelton was whispering in the ear of Bro. McNabb, whereupon the latter seated himself, and a new-comer was introduced to the audience. The long ride, the surprise of the people at this sudden change of speakers, and the ignorance of the progress of the meeting up to that hour, were urged in vain as pleas put in to be excused from the service. "You must be heard."

Without apology, and looking upward for aid, I tried to do the best in my power. Evidently the presence and power of God were there. The conclusion of the discourse was a call for mourners. About thirty were soon at the altar, crying: "What must I do to be saved?" At this point the meeting was turned over to Bro. Shelton, who was well acquainted with those who could lead in the public supplications at the throne of grace for precious souls. Before that service closed a call was made for volunteers, and fourteen marched to the front—four from one family. The next night friend Weems, with several others, cast in his lot with those Christian people. I am happy to know that he is on the road to the heavenly rest. Go on, Bro. Weems; there is a home above.

For nine days I was in the midst of a praying people, and many were the seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The Sabbath was a day long to be remembered by all who participated in that Pentecostal feast. On this occasion the preaching was near the Sadler residence. I was domiciled with this family two days and nights, and learned to love them. The sermon was in memory of the life, character, virtues and death of our departed loved one—Mrs. Bosworth. Her memory was embalmed in the hearts of that people. When I spoke of her sufferings and affliction, tears flowed fast and free from many sorrowing hearts. When a description of her triumph and death was attempted it seemed as if she was then present with her old associates, infusing strength to their faith, brightness to their hopes, and such a view of the heavenly country that a simultaneous "Glory to God!" went up from every part of the house. How pleasant such scenes are to be enjoyed! The major was present, and was completely overpowered by the ecstatic bliss manifested all around him.

At this time another call was made for soldiers to enlist in the cause of Christ. Sixteen promptly responded. One incident to be noticed: The father, mother, and two of the children, nearly grown, then of the Catholic Church, came forward boldly and gave in their names to follow Christ. The last night I was at the fort this man was with me. His conversation was a feast to me, while with great joy and much weeping he would speak of the great change of heart he had experienced at that meeting.

During those days I was in the midst of a kind and Christian people. Plenty and welcome abounded wherever I went. One instance of Christian charity I will relate: There was among them a mother in Israel, known as Mother Averitt. True, she was old, but was active, and chose horseback in preference to other modes of travel—always kept her own horse for her own accommodation. On one of the days, while going to church, she overtook a faint and weary female pedestrian on the way to the house of God. Instantly the feeble one was mounted on the horse, while Mother Averitt walked by her side. This I witnessed. There were many Good Samaritans in that community.

A few months ago, Mr. Editor, I read in your paper some sketches written by a Bro. Nicholson, referring to the place and people I was at and among. Such incidents and scenes, brought back by memory, give me joy and courage, enabling me to say that "Jesus has been with me; he is still with me, and has promised to be with me to the end." O for these gracious seasons to be often repeated in these days!

T. W. Matthews.

Mobile, Ala., August 14, 1876.

The original manuscript of Gray's "Elegy in a Country Church-Yard" will shortly be sold by auction by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge. It is inscribed "Stanzas wrote in a Country Church-Yard," and contains many verses than appeared in the printed poem, and several valuable emendations. It was preserved in the Penn collection at Stoke Pogis, and passed, for the sum of £151, into the hands of the present owner at the sale of those literary treasures in 1851, under the hammer of the same auctioneers that are again to sell it.

Baptist Bigotry.

Mr. Editor: In the "Minutes of the Fifty-Sixth Annual Meeting of the Pearl River (Mississippi) Baptist Convention, 1875," there is a deliverance worthy of record in your columns. It is ritualistic high churchism run mad. Puseyism, Campbellism nor popery have hardly furnished a more melancholy instance of intolerance. But to the extract:

"On motion the association took up the query from Antioch church, Lawrence county.

QUERY.

"1. Is it consistent and scriptural for Baptist members to extend the right hand of fellowship to Pedo-Baptists when they are receiving members by letter from their sister churches, when they are congregated in their so-called church?

"And when members are guilty of so doing, and being admonished by their church that it is not consistent with Baptist usage, and they contend that they are right, and affirm that they recognize the Methodist as a legitimate branch of the church of Christ, what would be the proper course to pursue with such members?

"The following answer to the above query by the committee was adopted by the association:

"We believe that any member of any of our churches who will extend the right hand of fellowship to any person or persons, other than those who have been regularly received into the fellowship of some regular Baptist church, should be dealt with in the spirit of charity. And if he will not renounce his errors he should be excluded from the fellowship of the church. We believe that there is but one true church of Christ on earth.

J. M. Ritchey,
Chairman of Committee."

Comment is unnecessary, Mr. Editor. But I feel that it is due our people to let them know in what light they are held by all high church Baptists. Such arrogance ought to be known, because when it is known it dies in its own seclusiveness.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.

Mr. Editor: Permit me, as one of the visiting committee of the Mississippi Conference to Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, to report through your columns something concerning its last session and the closing exercises thereof. This institution has now completed two years under its present management. It is a favorable indication of its prosperity that the session just closed was, as the president stated, much more satisfactory than the previous one. Especially as to the boarding department was this true, there being a gratifying increase therein.

The exercises at the close of the term manifested the fact that teachers had labored faithfully and pupils had studied well. Everything was thorough, impartial, and very gratifying to the friends of the school. Much interest was manifested by the large audience present.

As the work of the past two sessions has been greatly that of building up from the foundation, there have been as yet no graduates of the institution; but next year we expect all the machinery of a commencement occasion.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy has no debt upon it, the buildings are of an excellent character, all the surroundings unsurpassed, and the faculty ample and strong.

It is to be hoped that in future this most meritorious enterprise will receive the patronage and reward which it so richly deserves. Without detracting from any other, it may be said that it stands among the best of the educational institutions seeking popular recognition and support. Rev. J. A. B. Jones is still its president, and expects to be permanently connected with it. This is his home, where he will labor to do good, and where, we trust, he will build up for himself a monument more durable than brass.

E. H. Mosher.

A carping old woman said once to her pastor: "Dear me, ministers mak' muckle adae about their hard wark. But what's twa bits o' sermons in the week tae muk' up? I could do't mysel'." "Well, Janet," said the minister, good-humoredly, "let's hear you try't." "Come awa' wi' a text, then," quoth she. He repeated with emphasis: "It is better to dwell in the corner of the house-top than with a brawling woman in a wide house." Janet lifted up her stately: "What's that you say, sir? Do ye mind anything personal?" "Stop, stop!" broke in her pastor, "you would never do for a minister." "And what for no?" said she. "Because, Janet, you come ower soon to the application."

A tourist who was asked in what part of Switzerland he felt the healthiest, replied: "When I was going to Berne."

A few cheese parings and candle ends Christians have given away to missions, but little more.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

Gabriel Lyons was born in St. Landry parish, La., November 25, 1812. He died on Sunday morning, July 2, 1876.

If it be true that "an honest man is the noblest work of God," then was he justly entitled to that honorable appellation. His honesty was of that rare type which would have prompted him to "swear to his own hurt, and change not." As the mother to this grace, and the one which nourished it and brought it to perfection, may be mentioned his remarkable unselfishness. That he possessed this in an eminent degree will be readily admitted by all who knew him. It continually manifested itself in his life by his constantly preferring others rather than himself.

He did not unite with the church or profess religion until his forty-fifth year. He was led to this, as he testified, mainly through the influence of his children. From the hour of his conversion to the hour of his death he never lost the evidence of his acceptance with God.

He was a temperate man from his youth, but a short time before his death he had engaged actively in the temperance work. Dr. J. W. Harmon organized a temperance society in the neighborhood, and he was elected president. He was greatly in earnest on the subject. In his last prayers before death he was heard to invoke the blessing of God upon the efforts of the society.

Death came to him, as it does to all men, in such an hour as he thought not. Six days before his death he was in the enjoyment of perfect health. But although the Master came in an hour when he was not expecting him, yet, like a good servant, he found him watching. His house was in order. When told that he was dangerously sick, and asked if he was afraid, he promptly responded: "No, I am not afraid to die, if it be God's will, I am ready." Soon afterward he asked me to pray for him; but particularly directed me not to pray for his restoration to health unless it was best in the sight of God. But he specially requested me to pray that his mind might be clear to the last. This prayer God mercifully answered. Although for two days and nights before death his lips were sealed and his voice scarcely distinguishable, yet his mind was as clear as it was in perfect health. God kept him thus long-standing fearlessly in the midst of the cold waters of the last river, to testify to friends and neighbors of the sufficiency of his almighty grace. This he did most satisfactorily. His explanations to the numerous friends who called seemed to be inspired. The great burden of his message was: "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

Mrs. Melissa Ann Whitehead, daughter of Rev. N. C. and Mary Ann Long, was born March 21, 1817, in Newton county, Miss. Being the child of Christian parents, she was baptized in infancy. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 18—, under the ministry of Rev. John Ayscue, at the early age of twelve years. When quite a child she seemed to be impressed with a knowledge of the efficacy of prayer. She resorted daily to the secret grove, that she might pray to her Father in secret, and be rewarded openly by him who seeth in secret. Thus she lived an acceptable member of the church, kept to all around her, and especially devoted to the cause of parental affection and obedience.

She was married, July 22, 1872, to Mr. J. M. Whitehead, a gentleman of considerable intelligence and moral habits, though not a member of the church. He joined the quiet, in April after his marriage, under the ministry of this writer. Sister Whitehead was kind and affectionate toward her husband, for which she was always duly compensated by kindness and affection bestowed in return. She gave birth to two children, both daughters, whom she seemed determined to "train up in the way they should go" "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," that they might become bright ornaments in Christian society.

She was a woman of extraordinary industry so far as secular matters were concerned. She was as earnestly engaged for the comfort of the body as the soul. On Sunday morning, December 19, 18—, she was pursuing her daily avocation, when she began to experience an unusual degree of chilliness in the system, which in a few minutes prostrated her, never more to rise in health. In a very short time she became senseless and unable to speak. She continued in this condition, growing weaker and weaker until awhile before the break of day on the morning of the thirteenth, when her soul was kindly released from its clay prison, and took its flight into worlds hitherto unknown.

As Sister Whitehead was senseless and unable to speak during her dying moments, she said nothing in relation to her future experience; but I have often heard her say, when in health, that she was prepared to die at any time the awful summons might come. Bro. Whitehead told me that a short time before her death she seemed determined to be more devoted to the cause of her Master than ever before, and gently admonished him to be more attentive to matters pertaining to family discipline, but spoke particularly in relation to family worship.

Sister Whitehead leaves a husband, one child, her younger child having gone before her to the glory land, one brother, and one sister. Her brother, Wilton W. Long.

Funeral services were held in the Methodist church in Canton, on the twenty second ultimo, over the remains of Sister Julia E. Carnell, wife of Bro. T. A. Campbell, of our board of stewards.

☞ A touching association was recalled to the large assembly by the funeral scene. The same house had been elaborately decorated, less than three years ago, by devoted friends for their marriage ceremony—an occasion of happy and hearty congratulation.

Sister Julia was only about twenty-three years old—was born in Jessamine county, Ky., April 6, 1853. She died at Castilian Springs, July 22, after an illness of nearly seven months.

Her circle of friends was unusually large for one so young. So effectually had the gentle graces of her person won upon the acquaintances that she was universally loved.

She had been a member of the church since June 7, 1868—C. G. Andrews, pastor—but had developed in Christian character to no noticeable extent, her natural traits being quiet and affectionate. In the latter part of her sickness she was more communicative, and testified to a deeper experience than was suspected. Her dying message to the pastor was to "tell her friends to come to Jesus;" and her kindred—Bro. Cassell's family, Judge Campbell's families—to "meet her in heaven." Mrs. Campbell, her mother-in-law, in whose home she passed most of her time, gives most affectionate testimony of her patience under suffering and long illness; and her husband dwells with heartfelt satisfaction upon the assurance which her life and dying testimony offered him of her ascent to the Lord, and her reunion with him in glory.

W. E. M. Linfield.

Sister Lucy W. Adams, wife of Rev. J. W. Adams, late of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Wilkes county, Ga., November 3, 1810; moved with her father's family to Lowndes county, Miss., in 18—; was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1841; was married to Rev. J. W. Adams October —, 1843; removed to Madison county, Miss., in 18—, and died in Sharon, April 9, 1876.

Sister Adams was the mother of seven children. Two daughters preceded her to the spirit land. One son is a youthful warrior in Zion's walks—an honored member of the Mississippi Conference.

Having known the deceased for nearly twenty years, we are prepared to say that few women have left behind them a more hallowed impress upon the domestic and social circle. To her bereaved husband all that is implied in the term helpmeet to her—to her children all that clings around the sacred name of mother. Of a retiring, gentle disposition, divine grace had so softened and sweetened her temperament as to impart to her a soothing influence for good over all with whom she came in contact. Charity, meekness and godliness were the prominent attributes of her ministerial character. Hence in all life's sorrows she was to her family and friends a safe, wise counselor—a strong support of our holy religion.

Having thus lived, when death came she had on "the wedding garment," and passed, at once, into the higher and purer inheritances of Christianity. From such a life and such a death let the bereaved ones, the church and the world draw the lesson to right living—the good fight of faith, and the eternal life.

Col. Alford Gaddy was born in Pendleton district, S. C., December, 1—, and settled in Gregory's, Ala.

The writer has not been able to obtain satisfactory histories of the childhood and youth of our brother. Those, the most interesting and important years of his life, were spent upon the frontiers of Georgia and Alabama, especially the latter. During this period his early educational advantages were limited; but by personal industry and application he supplied this want of early training to such a degree as to secure him success and prominence in all the business and social relations of life. In the year 1841 he was married to Miss A. E. Kelley, of Georgia, and in 184— he and his wife united themselves with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and lived happily together until his death. Col. Gaddy had the traits of character which constitute the true Christian gentleman. If there was a peculiarity in his religious convictions, it was his high appreciation of the goodness of God in the gift of his Son, and the ability of Christ to save all who come unto God by him. These were among his last words: "Jesus is with me and I am safe." And then turning to his pastor, he said: "We could not get along here without Jesus." The writer was deeply impressed with his consciousness of the presence of Jesus. All who were present and heard him during his last hours were impressed with the reality and divinity of his religion, and that the shadow of death is to his friends as to him.

Sister Nancy Pickett was born June —, 1824. She was united in marriage to Judge B. Pickett December 21, 1840, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in October 15, 1874. After three months of great suffering she died triumphantly, August 29, 1876. She embraced religion a few days before her death, after which her remaining strength were spent in exhorting all to serve the Lord. When they would answer to her inquiry, she would entreat them not to speak that way, but say, "I am going," and prepare to seek immediately. Such a triumphant death bed is not often seen. The Scripture, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them," is very applicable to her, as her works do follow her. Her husband and mother have attached themselves to the church, and the power of the religion of the blessed Master has been so strikingly manifested in her triumphant death that the community are deeply impressed with the necessity of salvation.

Hattie Porterfield, daughter of T. W. and M. J. Hines, was born in Waxahachie, Texas, July 2, 1871, and departed this life at Mrs. S. Carson's, Waxahachie, Texas, August 10, 1876, aged one year, eleven months and eleven days.

Mr. Ruskin proposes to found a model village, which shall illustrate his principles of taste and beauty. He has obtained a site near Sheffield, and also subscriptions in support of his scheme to the amount of $25,000. He intends to build a number of cottages, to found a museum, and to carry out his long-cherished plan as far as his funds will allow.

OUR FIRST GRAY HAIR.

BY WALTER C. HOWDEN.

The first big pattering drops that fall
With a splash on our ladies pane;
Seem silver and start as they warn us all
Of a storm or of coming rain.
Is it with life when we're growing old,
As age steals on unaware—
Silver and start, if the truth were told,
At the sight of our first gray hair.

Mark not the light of the noonday hours,
Like the first streaks the dawn doth bring,
Hail not the birth of the summer flowers
Like the first snow-drop of spring;
The bleak winter wind we look not with grief,
Though it howl through the branches bare;
We sigh when we witness the brown autumn leaf,
But behold oulure's first gray hair.

Hairs may come when the beaming eye
Has none of its brightness lost,
Nor with buoyant heart we would fain deny
Youth's Rubicon had been crossed;
The ivy-clad tree looks young and green,
Though a sapless trunk it be there;
A thought of decay on our cheek may be seen
When we witness our first gray hair.

A noble crown to a noble life
Is a head of silvery gray;
'Tis well if it find with the struggle and strife
Its rest at the close of day;
A gray-headed sin bears a groundless curse,
And the parent of dark despair...
It gives us a song, or, doubly worse,
Adds the sight of a first gray hair.

We early come late, like a knock at the gate
That first soft, silvery thread,
And joins with its silence the years that wait
In the years forever fled;
Softly tells us we're journeying on—
Silently questions us—Where?
Faithful milestone, were no truth hath known,
Save in our first gray hair.

Scripture Giants.

Various estimates have been made of the probable height of Goliath and David. The uncertain element is the unit used. Goliath's height, six cubits and a span (1 Samuel xvii, 4), has generally been concluded to be from nine feet six inches to twelve feet. Og is commonly supposed to have been rather taller, but the estimate is based on the length of his bedstead. Deuteronomy iii, 11. In this it is quite hazardous to deal. A giant king might pride himself on his stature, and wish to keep up the idea of it by a specially large bed-stead of iron. It seems probable that Goliath was more gigantic than the warriors mentioned as of "the sons of the giants," of great stature," and the like. Supposing the shekel of brass to be the same as a shekel of iron, Goliath's spear was twice the weight of that of Ishbibenob. In modern days soldiers ten feet in height would not be specially valued. Frederick William's army of giants was a matter of ridicule rather than of awe. Let us see how far the giants of old differed from them. We now lay no great stress on a few inches in height. Frederick William had some exceptionally men found for him by the Czar, but we may safely fix his limit at ten feet, a height of which we have well recorded during the last two thousand years. His guards, however, were individual specimens, in most cases men who from some exceptional cause grew wonderfully in size, they were overgrown men. The giants in Scripture were a race, and the difference is very great. It is common to find a man with a excess of vital energy differing greatly from his fellows—that is, those of his race. Consequently a very tall man is generally rather to be... In some cases a very well-made tall man may have his arteries and limbs so formed that the work of the heart in propelling the blood to the extremities is less felt than might be supposed. But men that have shown extraordinary energy we are not now speaking of single efforts of strength, very active leaders in wars, for example, have, on the whole, been to be marked rather as being short than tall. Napoleon was very short, perhaps not five feet four inches. Nelson was very small. Wellington, we believe, only five feet eight inches. Peter the Great was short rather than tall. So far as we can learn, Ptolemy Philopator is almost the only great soldier that was decidedly tall. Marlborough was a handsome man, but there seems no record of his being specially tall. It may well have been with him as with Louis the Fourteenth, of whom we hear that when stripped of his high heels and wig, he laid in his coffin, his attendants could hardly believe that they saw the little human frame before them the body of "le Grand Monarque." And William the Third was a middle-sized, and his extraordinary opponent Luxemburg, was a dwarf. Marlborough was small; so, we believe, was Cromwell. As, however, there is considerable difficulty in obtaining reliable evidence on such points, we pass at once to what we believe to be the fair conclusion. To find a man's overgrown or not depends on this depends his real fitness for severe work—we must know not only his own height, but that of his enemy generally rather to be.

In a Strait.

Thousands are tired of life who have no assured hope of the life to come. Paul's weariness and sufferings had something to do with his desire to depart, but much more was he moved by the longing to be with Christ. It is not seldom that we meet with Christians who are in the strait of the apostle: "In a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." The hitherward side of the apostle's strait, it will be noticed, was a line of duty and usefulness. To abide in the flesh was more needful for the churches, for their "furtherance and joy of faith."

This high motive for living is not always uppermost in the thoughts of devout people. Very naturally and very properly they revert to dependent families, to business affairs, to domestic and social ties. They have a vivid conception of how their departure would affect these various interests. It seems needful that they should live for the welfare of others, for the accomplishment of their secular undertakings and for the completion of the plans of life. The need of their service in the cause of Christ is not prominent in their estimate of the situation, and it may have no recognition whatever. To be reconciled to living in a world of toil and suffering, by the consideration of what we may do here for Christ and his church, is rather above the average experience. That we are here, and kept here, through years of labor and anxiety, that we may contribute our part toward the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom, is certainly a noble conception of our earthly mission, and one calculated to inspire us with something more than mere patience and submission. Our social and domestic relations draw us tenderly and strongly, and our temporal affairs tether us to the earthly stake; but the use which God has for us in his work should be a far more powerful incentive to accept the lot which has fallen to us.

The apostle was between these two—Christ and his service here, and Christ and his glory yonder. It was between these coast lines of duty here and glory hereafter that he moved. Coast lines they were, whose golden edges nearly touched as the soul of the saint in mid-channel partook almost equally of the balm and spicery wafted from either shore. It is common for men to become tired of life, and for them to look forward with something like desire to the end, when these weary rounds of drudgery shall cease. Many have been upon the verge of self-destruction, driven to it by misfortune and pain, and others have launched themselves into eternity under the pressure of life's troubles. The strait with them was between the ills we know and those we know not of. And the weariness of life which better people feel, and the desire for the heavenly rest, are not always marked by a high sense of duty and gratitude to God. The strongest tie to earth is not the service of Christ here, and that which draws them heavenward is not that they may be with Christ.

If the strait we are in is betwixt these two—Christ's work as the reason and the supreme joy of living, and Christ's glory as the attraction of heaven—then have we gained the very experience which apostolic example justifies. To live is Christ, to die is gain. Between Christ here and Christ there—this was the strait. The very brightest aspect of this life, its only real satisfaction and pleasure, are in living to Christ; but to be with Christ in heaven is far better. To live for Christ is something good, a happiness inexpressibly great, a distinction and an honor of peerless luster; but to die, to depart and be with Christ, is something far better. There are drawings both ways—toward earth, that we may work for Christ, and toward heaven, that we may be with him. That God keeps us here is evidence enough that he has something still for us to do. While we look with yearning hearts toward the other shore, we must accept our earthly mission and fulfill it with joy.

God knows best when our work is done. The days of activity may be over. Age and sickness and infirmity may lay us aside; but the work of prayer is as vital to the cause of Christ as the more material means. Some saints are kept here for their prayers. There is the element of suffering. Christ needs sufferers to exhibit the fullness of his grace, and to demonstrate the divine power of religion to comfort and support. The strait may last through long years of inactivity and affliction. Perfect submission to live there may be, because to live is Christ, at the same time that the desire to depart grows stronger with each passing month or year. There comes an hour at last when the soul, winged and plumed for flight, is in a strait no longer: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." The earthly mission is done and the last strong tie of duty is sundered. Everything earthward is let go, and the far better bursts upon the long-waiting spirit.

Stated Broadly.

Mr. Redpath, who accompanied the Congressional committee to Mississippi, writing to the Independent, says:

I never experienced so keen a sorrow, connected with public affairs, as during my visit to Mississippi. I never had so profound a contempt for what is called the conservative Republican policy. We ought never to have given the negro a vote, or we ought to have forced him to learn to read, and built a school for him in every township. He has shown that he is not fit to rule in Mississippi. He is the dupe in peace of black and white demagogues; and, alas! in war—for the last campaign was a military revolution—he is the only victim who suffers from our sins of omission.

The negro county governments in Mississippi bore the same relation to orderly Republican administrations that negro minstrelsy burlesques bear to the divine symphonies of Beethoven. What right had we to expect a better result? Fellow-Republicans, it is idle to denounce the South. We are to blame. We knew the negro to be timid, unarmed, illiterate, and yet we left him in the midst of the fiercest fighters on this planet, and expected him to rule them. In Mississippi his power went down in violence and blood. So it will disappear, unless we act promptly, in South Carolina and Louisiana. It is the greatest problem of our time, and a most complex problem.

Let us state it broadly. If we give complete military protection to the negro in all elections in South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana, where there is a large black majority, we shall establish a system of government which no white race on the face of this earth either ought to endure or will endure. This is one side. And the other side of the problem reads: If we fail to protect the negro in his right of suffrage, we thereby surrender the States of South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana to the same brutal banditti which drove those communities into civil war. As Mr. Tweed remarked: "What are you going to do about it?"

There is a great deal of truth in the above extract. It is especially true, if the negroes and carpet-baggers are kept in power, that there will be established "a system of government which no white race on the face of this earth either ought to endure or will endure." The most serious slander and falsehood in Mr. Redpath's article is that the Southern people are "a brutal banditti," and that the negro and his suffrage will not be protected by them. There is no such dilemma as Mr. Redpath contemplates. Negro rule is ruinous and intolerable. This he confesses, and we know it too well to be true. What then? The only solution of this question is to leave these States to the control and management of its intelligent and taxpaying citizens. Under such governments the disorderly elements among the whites will be put down, the colored people will be protected, and, as far as possible, educated, and there will be no more bloody conflicts between the races. The only objection to this course is that by it these States would be lost to the Republican party. This is the trouble. Better remand them to territorial or military government, better subject them to endless conflicts and to permanent impoverishment and desolation, than to allow them to pass from under the Radical yoke. But for this partisan spirit, and a large leaven of ignorant fanaticism, the course to be pursued would be perfectly clear.

Letter from England.

Mr. Editor: Nearly all the Annual Conferences of the Methodist denominations here have been held. The Wesleyan and Methodist Free Churches Conferences are at present in session—the former at Nottingham, and the latter at Sheffield.

The Primitive Methodist Conference was held at Newcastle-on-Tyne. This is the largest and most prosperous of the minor Methodist denominations. It has grown very rapidly. Its beginning was small. When Hugh Bourne was retired from the Wesleyan Church for alleged irregularities he had no following, nor did he seek disciples by trying to agitate, and appealing to public sympathy and support. He might have done so with a plausible and successful showing, but he preferred the more excellent and Christian way, pursued his religious course quietly and zealously, never dreaming that a large religious community would grow out of his unpretentious labors. As was Bourne, so have been his successors in the ministry—men of one business. They practically indorse and embody the Pauline motto—"This one thing I do"—and hence the success and present position of their church. Last year the increase in the membership was seven thousand. Dr. Robert G. Cather, the apostle of a religious specialty which has no claim to support, obtained a hearing at the Conference. The doctor is as a specialist what Dr. Cumming is as a prophet—one of the greatest failures of the age. The Rev. J. Dickenson was elected president by a majority of six over a layman who was nominated for the chair of the assembly.

The Methodist New Connection Conference was held in Dewsbury, and the Rev. C. D. Ward was elected secretary. Mr. Ward is a minister of high connectional standing, and an honorable and successful ministerial record. The ministers of this denomination are men of culture and ability.

The Rev. T. Booth was elected president of the Methodist Free Churches. The accession to the membership of this body during the past year was five thousand. The increase in the membership of the New Connection was nearly one thousand. The constitution of the New Connection Conference provides for an equal number of ministers and laymen; that of the Methodist Free Churches allows that the assembly may be composed altogether of laymen or of ministers, and yet the ministers are always in a large majority.

The Irish Wesleyan Conference assembled in Dublin, the president of the English Conference in the chair, as is always the case. The companions of the Rev. Gervase Smith, the president, from England were the Revs. J. W. Greeves, John Kilner, William M. Punshon, LL. D., and John H. James, D. D. Drs. Punshon and James, being ex-presidents, have been to the Irish Conference before. Messrs. Greeves and Kilner visited it officially for the first time. The president's son, who is a minister, was also present, and was honored with a seat on the platform.

All the interests of Irish Wesleyanism are in a healthy and prosperous state. Indeed never was this branch of the great Methodist family so vigorous as now. Its missionary, educational and chapel building departments are all flourishing. The college at Belfast and the Connectional school in Dublin had both a surplus income over their expenditures during the year. Mr. Robinson Scott is the president of the college, and the Rev. T. A. McKee principal of the school.

The representatives to the English Conference are the Revs. J. W. McKay, W. McMullan and Wesley Guard, and the following ministers were elected chairmen of their respective districts: the Revs. Fred. Elliott, John Hazelton, Richard Maxwell, W. G. Price, E. M. Banks, Edward Tuard, George Vance, J. D. Powell and J. K. McKay. Mr. Powell and Mr. Elliott were elected for the first time, and suitably acknowledged the compliment.

A scheme of lay representation was adopted, which will take effect next year; and an increase in the membership of one hundred and eleven was reported.

The Primitive Wesleyan Society held its Conference in Dublin, and elected the Rev. T. C. Maguire as its president. It was expected that this body would unite with the Wesleyan Church after the Irish Episcopalian Church was disestablished, but, although the subject has been entertained and considered by both Conferences for several years, the union will never be effected. The mission of Primitive Wesleyanism appears to be accomplished, and its disappearance as a distinct body is only the question of a very few years.

The Rev. Alexander McAulay has been elected president of the English Wesleyan Conference by a majority of nine votes over Dr. James H. Rigg, and twenty over the Rev. Samuel Coley. Mr. McAulay has been very successful as a pastor. Wherever he has been stationed success has crowned his labors. His election, therefore, is a testimony to his worth and faithfulness as a minister.

Lay representation will be discussed and possibly adopted by the Conference. There are eight hundred ministers present, and the membership of the denomination has been largely increased during the year.

Among the Hills.

Mr. Editor: Cool as October and bright as May the sun shone out on the July morning, when, stepping from the swift train which had flitted with us from the far South to the blue Virginia hills, we found ourselves in the picturesque village of Emory, crowned with its stately edifice of learning, the well-known Emory and Henry College. Soft and blue beyond spread the distant mountains, hazy as a dream-picture, while the fruitful hills were yielding to the reapers golden grain from out their billowy bosoms. One glance took in all the fair picture, while the hurrying train sped panting on its eager way, and left us standing, uncertain, near the track, where our good angel met us, and guided us into the hospitable Virginia home, embowered with graceful vines and pendant grapes, and embosomed among the green trees which nestle all along the fertile valleys of this delightful region.

The village of Emory is scattered, in style most prodigal of space and beauty, over more than a mile, every homestead being on its own especial hill, and looking out from greenest groves, and across most verdant clover, to the misty mountains, which stand sentinel around their beloved valley. In and out, romantic paths wind through dingles where the sun never finds his way, and where the children scamper, gathering treasures of berries, which grow large and sweet, and of every variety.

"The Store" is one of the features of Emory, being its only mercantile establishment, comprising a few square feet of dry goods, and where the natives from the mountains do congregate. Pale-eyed mountaineers in patched shoes and homespun suits, slowly and leisurely saunter up to its fascinating precincts, leading their pale-eyed offspring to admire the rare assortment, and to exchange blackberries for coffee, mayhap.

The professors' homes surround old Emory and Henry at convenient distances, each a little paradise of vines and flowers, which beautify the solid brick edifices that look as though built for the generations to come.

The college building stands on a lofty eminence, stern and brown, and silent, it being vacation, and its echoing halls empty. The college library is extensive, and its museum contains many mineralogical treasures, and some curiosities, among others the veritable bones of a mastodon, found in Tennessee. From the observatory is a magnificent view of the surrounding country for fifty miles, White Top, the highest peak in the State, being plainly visible.

The number of students is not so great as before the war, when three and four hundred young men were gathered under its benign influence and guidance. It speaks grand things, and prophetic, for the instructors and the future of this institution that many ministers are graduated here—twenty-one from the class a year ago, fifteen from the class this year. God speed such work and such endeavor. It seems, indeed, a most favorable spot for the location of a college—afar from the besetments of a larger town; while many of its students board in the families around, enjoying all the benefits, and sheltered by the gentle restraint of home-life.

Emory is on the highway to the great exhibition, and in the vicinity of several mineral springs, the Washington and Alleghany being nearest, and quite accessible, where fine scenery and comfortable accommodations woo the weary traveler.

Fashion has not yet found these rural retreats. Only the thoughtful step of literature and science have penetrated the mountain fastnesses thus far, and made it their dwelling-place. One may enjoy the privacy of home, and at will the pleasures of cultivated society among the professors and other families. A brief rest here is a most enjoyable thing to any wishing health, and a quiet broken only by the puff of the passing train twice a day.

A few hours' ride farther on is Salem, the village of peace, where fair green mountains with cloud-crowns cluster, and lovely farms spread out in rich profusion. Mountain springs ripple off out of sight, singing over their pebbles, and then surprise one by a sudden, laughing leap, just at your feet; when, utilizing their beauty, they hound us gaily over the mill wheels, "making drudgery divine" in the sparkling play-work to which they transform it.

This hill country is not generally rich in soil. The fields of corn are usually dwarfed and poor, though better than the Alabama and Georgia yield on the lands which border the railway between New Orleans and Virginia. One is constrained to wonder how the inhabitants survive on such stunted crops, grown on such hopelessly rocky and feeble soil.

In this Holston valley, however, in which Emory and Wytheville are situated, corn stands fair and tall, and rich with grain—"peace soldiers, standing rank and file," waving their banners greenly, their innocent blades rustling in whispers of promise, and looking equal to that on the lowlands of Louisiana. The ruddy cheeks we meet everywhere make us long to leave our alluvial plains and locate amid the breezy heights of Blue Ridge; though the "children of the sun" demur when told of the three feet of snow shrouding the earth three months without a thaw, and we turn again to our home-land of perpetual flowers. The moon is risen over the hills. Good night.

Nicie.

The British Conference convened at Nottingham, July 26. The Rev. Alexander Macaulay was elected president by 146 votes; Dr. Rigg got 137; Mr. Coley, 126. Dr. Williams was re-elected secretary. The Sunday School Union has made 570 grants, amounting to £3,000.

In the proceedings, as reported by the Methodist Recorder, is the following concerning their relations with the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

Dr. Rigg stated that several distinguished members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of the Southern States of America, had urgently expressed to him their strong desire that a representative from the British Conference should visit their Conference. He had represented to them the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of their sending a deputation to America every year, but they had suggested that when a representative was sent out to Canada he might take the opportunity of paying a visit to them. He did not ask that any decision should be arrived at just then in reference to this matter, but he did ask that it might be thought of. Dr. Punshon would bear him out in saying that there were many points about the Methodist Episcopal Church South which claimed their sympathy. They knew very well the false position in which they were placed by the circumstances in which they found themselves. Well, they did not make those circumstances, and those who knew the difficulties of slavery the best, the best understood how exceedingly difficult, perhaps impossible, it would have been for them to have extricated themselves from the meshes of slave resolutions some thirty years ago on principles which would have satisfied English Methodists. But all this was gone by. They were now themselves in fraternal relations with the Methodist Episcopal Church North. They sent their own deputation to that church, at the Baltimore Conference, and the salutation had been exchanged. Fraternal relations were now established between the two churches. He felt bound to ask that the communication he had received to lay before them might receive the kindly consideration of the Conference. He moved that a small committee be appointed to consider it.

The ex-president thought that the last communication which they received from that church was not quite so respectful in its character as to lead them to suppose that they would welcome a deputation from the British Conference.

Dr. Punshon was prepared very heartily to second Dr. Rigg's proposal. He had had personal intercourse with a good many leading men in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and he knew how reverentially they felt toward this Conference. He could not exactly defend everything they said in reply to the letter which had been sent to them, but that letter probably showed some misapprehension of the real issues that were contained in their difference from the Methodist Episcopal Church North, and they wanted to correct that misapprehension. Apart from that, their communication was respectfully worded.

Dr. Rigg's motion was accepted.

Our readers should not fail to notice the advertisement of the Collegiate Institute, Baton Rouge, La. Prof. Magruder is a veteran educator, and his school, of long standing, has always been a model of excellence in its wise discipline and thorough instruction. Boys intrusted to Prof. Magruder's care will enjoy the advantages of a refined and comfortable home, and the best of moral, religious and social influences. From our personal knowledge of this institution we can most cordially recommend it to those who have sons to be educated.

The Revival in Troy, Ala.—A brother, giving some further account of this meeting than what was published last week, informs us that there were upward of thirty conversions when the special services closed.

We have an excellent agent in William N. Raines, of Hickory, Miss. He is a layman diligent in business, but finds time to work for the Advocate. There are some others of like mind, and successful in furthering our circulation. God bless our devoted laymen in this good work. We wish there were thousands of such men as a few we have in our mind. Bro. Raines, writing from Hickory, August 12, says:

"Dear Brother: I see in your paper that you are very hard pressed for money. I send you $9, which I will try to collect here in the subscriptions for your paper this fall. Times are very hard and dull, but I have sent you this much. I wish to do all I can for your paper, so the gospel of our blessed Savior may be spread near and wide.

We are having a great deal of rain. It has rained nearly every day so far this month. The rain-fall has been over six inches. Our cotton and corn lands are too wet to plow or hoe. Cotton has the rust, and some worms are reported not far off. Early corn was injured by drouth, but the late corn is good. Other crops, as cane, potatoes and peas, are excellent.

Yours fraternally,

William N. Raines."

Commodore Vanderbilt.—The commodore, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of August 19, has had some alternations for better and worse; but the last advices received from the family by his friends in Nashville are favorable. He is generally cheerful; joined in the celebration of the Lord's Supper a few days ago, and we hope as the heat of the summer declines his strength will rally, and he will be about again. It will be observed that we pay no attention to the gossip which goes the rounds of the papers. All here would be delighted if the commodore should recover his health in time to visit the university at the opening of the session next month. Since this was in type Bishop McTyeire received this dispatch from the commodore: "The doctors say I am improving."

Some time ago we published a short note from Rev. H. H. Montgomery in regard to changing the time of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences. We did not intend to open the columns of the Advocate for a discussion of the subject. The presiding elders and preachers can confer with the Bishops, but a newspaper discussion would not be expedient. For this year it might be best to let the appointments stand and let the matter be considered at the sessions of the Conferences. The Bishops will, no doubt, endeavor to meet the wishes of the majority when those wishes have been ascertained in Conference session. The Louisiana Conference, by resolution, requested that the time of its session should be fixed for the middle of December. At the ensuing session they may reconsider and favor the later date. Personally we have little preference about it; only it is important to our educational and publishing interests that the Conferences should not conflict in point of time.

Another of our old and prominent citizens is gone. Gen. Harry T. Hays died at his residence in this city on Monday, August 21. Gen. Hays was fifty-six years of age, a native of Wilkinson county, Miss., and a lawyer by profession. He distinguished himself in the Mexican war, and his heroic exploits as an officer in the Confederate service are matters of history. An able jurist, a good citizen, a brave soldier, an upright man, he will be long held in affectionate remembrance by his countrymen.

Rev. Preston Nash, late pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Warrington, Fla., has accepted a chaplaincy in the United States army, and will soon leave for Prescott, Arizona. Bro. Nash has done a good work at Warrington, and his people give him up with regret.

Rev. M. H. Wells, pastor of our church at Waco, Texas, writing August 1, says: "We have had a good meeting. Conversions, 87; members received, 83. Your article, "The Moral Conditions of Faith," was used to the effect with penitents. It was real manna to the congregation. Many were helped by it."

Louisiana Deutsches Journal is the title of a new German paper published in this city, in the interest of the Conservative party, and for the purpose of supplying our German population with a good medium of agricultural, commercial and literary intelligence.

Our readers are referred to the advertisement of the Southern University, which appears in the Advocate this week. We are glad to learn that the prospects of the institution are brightening, and that the fall session is likely to open with a good roll of students.

Our Sunday school periodicals for September are fully up to the mark. None better have been issued. In the Magazine we have, besides other excellent articles and editorial matter, a sketch of Rev. Dr. Jefferson Hamilton, by the Rev. F. M. Ellis.

F CAPERS LETTER.—The New Methodist says:

readers will remember that tablished the responsibility of y D. Capers for the publication letter purporting to have been en by his father, the late Bishop rs, to C. B. DuPre. August 1, 1876.

Notice to Dealers and Merchants Buying and Selling Iron Cotton Ties.

Whereas, sundry unscrupulous persons are offering for sale and selling Iron Cotton Ties in this city and other parts of the country, which are infringements upon the patent rights of the undersigned, which have been issued to us, and some bearing our registered trade mark, and some bearing the name of Open Slot. The whole of the said Ties are manufactured from our original patent, and are sold through dealers, at a price much below that at which we can afford to sell the genuine article, and are thereby depriving us of the profits on our inventions, which we have expended large sums of money to perfect, and which we are now introducing to the public, and are thereby causing us great loss and damage. As an additional protection to the public and ourselves, for several years we have stamped our buckles "Registered Tie, Open Slot."

MEDICAL.

A STRING OF PEARLS!

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1872:

"I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies.

Hon. Alex. H. Stephens has greatly improved in health of late.—The State Line, Press, Wed. Feb. 21st, 1872.

Testimony of the Chief Justice of Georgia.

"I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator, for constipation of my bowels, caused by a temporary derangement of the liver, for the last three or four years, and always, when used according to the directions, with decided benefit. I think it is a good medicine for the derangement of the liver—at least such has been my personal experience in the use of it.—Hiram Warner, Chief-Justice of Georgia.

Opinion of the Clergy.

"Simmons' Liver Regulator is certainly a specific for that class of complaints which it claims to cure. If any of our fellow-beings are suffering from hepatic disorders, and have doubts in relation to the efficacy of this popular preparation, we can only offer them the simple and candid argument of Philip to Nathaniel: 'Come and see.' Try the proposed remedy, and then you can judge for yourselves.—Rev. David Wills, Pastor 1st Presbyterian Church, Macon, Ga.

Always Keep It On Hand.

"I have used Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator myself, and in my family for years, and pronounce it one of the most satisfactory medicines that can be used. Nothing would induce me to be without it, and I recommend all my friends, if they want to secure health, to always keep it on hand.—Rev. L. Mell, Columbus, Ga., Times and Sun.

CAUTION!

Buy no Powders or Prepared Simmons' Liver Regulator, unless in our engraved wrapper, with trade mark, signature and signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Items About Sheep.

A Nevada sheep man, who had tried and succeeded with sheep, said: "Sheep are better than a government bond; you can tear off a coupon every six months, half as big as the bond, and the bond is left as good as it was." It was well put. Sheep are a bonanza to any man who gives as thorough attention as he would give any other business. The proper selection of herds and crosses comes in for first attention, with proper feed and skillful handling, with continued attention, and the profits follow certainly and satisfactorily.

A writer in the Country Gentleman says: "There is much said about ewes being too fat to breed well. In my experience of twenty years I have never seen anything that led me to think so, providing the flesh was put on with good pasture during the summer, and a few roots with good hay in winter. The fatter sheep become under such circumstances the more valuable I think them. There is no time in the year when it pays better to feed a small allowance of grain daily than in the fall after the feed gets frozen, and it is not necessary to bring the flock to the barn."

It is an old saying that "sheep well Novembered are half wintered." Keep the ewes fat, and the lambs will be fat and the fleeces heavy. I do not say that it is better to have the lambs come early or late, but I do say it is best to have them fat; but, whether early or late, they are salable. All ewes that with good care will not raise a lamb or shear four pounds of washed wool should be sold. I have them in my flock that will shear nine pounds and raise a pair of twins, and it costs no more to keep one than a sheep that shears but three pounds. I think that no one will hear the man who keeps his flocks in this way complaining because his sheep are all "run out," and do not pay him, and the like.

Ticks must be kept out of the flock; they are the worst enemies of the sheep. If they are not killed they will destroy the sheep. For killing them I have tried nothing better than tobacco juice.

Hulled Corn.

This old-fashioned luxury is coming into style again, and, as it is really a delicious dish when properly prepared, it may be acceptable to know the modus operandi of doing it right. Take a six-quart panful of ashes (hard-wood ashes if possible, as they are stronger); put them into an iron kettle, with three gallons of water, let them boil about five minutes; then set off from the fire, and turn in a pint of cold water to settle it. Turn off the lye and strain; put it into an iron kettle, and put in six quarts of shelled corn; put it over a brisk fire, and let it boil half an hour, skimming and stirring frequently. The outside skin of the kernels will then slip off. Strain off the lye and rinse thoroughly in several clear waters. When the lye is thus weakened turn the corn into a large dish-pan, and turn in water enough to cover it; then rub thoroughly with the hands till the little black chits come off; rinse and strain off till the water looks clear; then put back into a clean kettle, with water enough to cover it, and let it boil slowly. It will swell to more than double the first quantity. Boil till quite soft. It may be necessary to add water occasionally; stir often, so as not to burn it to the bottom of the kettle; when quite soft put in two large tablespoonfuls of salt and stir well. To be eaten with milk, or butter and sugar. It is a healthy dish, and although there is work in preparing it, yet it is good enough to pay for the labor and trouble. It is good either hot or cold, and was considered by our grandparents to be one of the greatest luxuries of the table. Wheat hulled in the same way is considered a great delicacy, and a very beneficial diet for invalids, but it is not so stable of nutritions as Indian corn. Smaller quantities can be prepared by using less lye and corn.—Farmer's Wife, in Country Gentleman.

Coal for Hogs.—The hog seems to crave carbon in a concentrated form, and hence we may conclude it necessary to his well-being. He will eat charcoal freely, which is tasteless and not nutritious. From the same natural prompting we see them eat wood, when so decayed that they can do so. For myself, I have for many years been in the habit of feeding my hogs with an abundance of our common bituminous coal, preferring the poorest, or that which contains a large amount of sulphur and iron, and I think with the happiest results. Let a farmer who has never tried it throw in a lump of coal as large as his fist, and he will be somewhat surprised to see the hog leave the corn and crush the coal, as if it were the most luscious morsel. Sulphur has long been known as a valuable remedial agent for hogs, and iron is a well known tonic, acting speedily upon the blood, thickening and strengthening it. Here, then, the hog, by eating coal, gets other important elements to solve the carbon. I have never known a hog well supplied with this coal to be sick or off his feet for a single day, and, although I cannot give actual results of careful experiments to prove it, I believe hogs thus supplied will make appreciably more pork, with a given amount of corn, than those which are without it. At least I am well satisfied with the way my hogs thrive, grow and fatten under this treatment. Coal is cheap, and others, if they have not, may try it at little expense.—Correspondent of Prairie Farmer.

OILS, LAMPS, ETC.

ILLUMINATING OILS

AND

AT

REDUCED PRICES.

THE

PUROLINE AND PORTABLE

GAS LIGHT CO.

Offer to the trade, at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES, the following list of their superior and popular brands:

INSURANCE OIL.

The Insurance Oil is the best Family Safety Oil, and is urgently recommended by all our fire insurance Companies as a substitute for common Coal Oil or Kerosene. It may be used in ordinary lamps Without Change of Burner.

THE NEW ORLEANS BOARD OF UNDERWRITERS SAY:

"It is our opinion that the general use of the Insurance Oil would greatly reduce the number of lamp-fires and explosions, and lessen the risk of destruction of life and property."

It will not explode or ignite in a lamp, as the price has been so reduced as to place it within the reach of all classes of consumers, and make it the great FAMILY SAFETY OIL.

As an Illuminating Oil for family use, or for general use in ordinary Kerosene or Coal Oil lamps, the Insurance Oil has the indorsement of the New Orleans Board of Health, the Fire Insurance Companies, and all the American and European Insurance Agencies, as PERFECTLY SAFE.

Refined Carbon or Coal Oil.

THE WELL-KNOWN CROWN BRAND.—This is a pure, high fire test Kerosene or Coal Oil, generally known as the Crown Oil, and recommended to the trade, and to consumers who buy CHEAP OIL, as the best and safest of all the LOW-PRICED ILLUMINATING OILS in market. In five years' experience no accident from its use has ever occurred. The Puroline and Portable Gas Light Company have the exclusive agency of this Crown Oil for the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas.

PUROLINE FLUID.

For Metallic Gas Lamps and Portable Gas Burners. Manufactured and sold only by the Puroline and Portable Gas Light Co. Ask your dealer for it.

This celebrated Fluid, prepared by a process known only to the proprietors, is the best and most reliable of all the products of Petroleum for use in Metallic Portable Gas Lamps and Lanterns. It burns clear and bright, is free from smoke or unpleasant odor, and does not clog the wick or gum the burner. No other fluid or oil should be used in Portable Gas Lamps or Lanterns.

Puroline is especially recommended for use in Portable Gas Lamps and Chandeliers, in Street Lanterns, Sugar-House Lamps, Cane Shed Lanterns, and in Torches and Gas Barriers for Steamboat Landings, Moonlight Picnics and Street Processions. Giving a light equal to the best city Coal Gas, it enables the people of the remotest villages to illuminate their Stores, Warehouses, Saloons, Hotels, Churches, Streets and Gardens as brilliantly as the favored residents of crowded cities.

Gasoline for Gas Machines.

This oil expressly for the Puroline and Portable Gas Light Company, and with special regard for the changes of temperature so common in this climate. The finest for generating gas, or for carbureting coal gas.

Proprietors, patentees and owners of Gas Machines cannot overestimate the importance of having their Gasoline of reliable gravity and quality, as excess of gravity, such as these oils,

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, well established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Throat and Bronchia is so well known and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Lungs, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in Pulmonary disorders, such as Rheumatism, Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which for want of proper care, so often degenerate into malignant Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, terminating in consumption, it has been found most effectual in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of curing truly extraordinary, medicine has been the favorite remedy of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to the most delicate constitution, as it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, and only because the bottles contain more than any other, also owing to its peculiar composition this Syrup will keep for years in any climate and it can be used in families as a beverage, as well as by simply keeping the feet warm.

Directions for Taking the Syrup.—Adults can take from a tea-spoonful to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted with water, or a less quantity at intervals of two or three hours.

Persons much troubled during the night can take two tablespoonfuls of the Syrup on retiring, which will stop the cough and procure a night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from half to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities at intervals of three or four hours. For sale by

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turner's Hair Tint

HARMLESS BEAUTIFUL PERMANENT

This preparation has received the highest encomiums from the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind. No washing or preparation of the hair necessary before using.

It is free from all Deleterious Ingredients, and contains no Lead, Sulphur, or other mineral substance which may injure the Hair.

Directions in Many Languages.

And its use will not stain the skin, but a few drops applied with a comb, once a month or oftener, as the Hair or Whiskers grow, restores the prematurely gray hair to its original color, producing a beautiful color being so perfectly assimilated with the natural hair as to defy detection. Its great recommendation is the preparation of tint, producing any desired shade, from light brown to the deepest black, and the absence of that dry and burned appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery can be applied to a single hair, or spot that has turned white, and it can be restored to their original shade by simply applying all over the head, as is necessary in using other Hair Dyes.

THE BALANCED SCREW COTTON PRESS.

THIS is the most valuable improvement ever made upon the Screw Cotton Press. It relieves all the usual difficulties and adds thereto a perfect control of the

The nut is operated and locked upon the screw by means of a lever. With the nut open, the screw and follower are let down upon the cotton, then the nut is closed and the pressing is done in the usual manner. Then open the nut, and raise up the screw and follower instead of screwing it open. This rising and lowering the screw by means of the compressing plates saves two-thirds, at least, of the time, lightening the labor and labor of pressing and baling.

This Press has taken the premium over all competitors at the Great State Fairs of Mississippi and Louisiana.

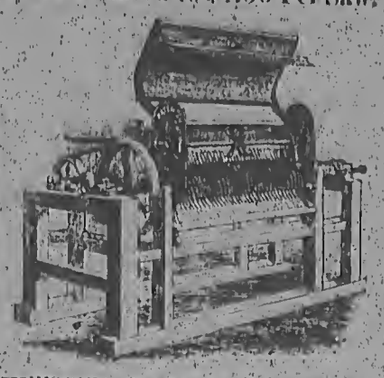
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power above any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton of this account a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every five bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

COTTON.

We take the following from the cotton circular of Messrs. W. C. Watts & Co., dated Liverpool, August 4:

"The Position, Etc.—The more hopeful views we expressed in our circular of a week ago on the general position of cotton have been fully verified this week. The trade have bought with unwonted freedom, and there is no decided indication yet that they have satisfied their wants. Notwithstanding the unusually large business of 107,810 bales done last week, a fresh week has commenced to-day, with sales estimated at 15,000 bales, and with a hardening tendency in prices. A few days ago a relapse in the value of silver, and a corresponding drop in Indian exchange, checked the buoyancy of this market, but the pause was of short duration, and the disturbing cause only temporary. On Wednesday last India council drafts were sold at 1s. 7¾d. against 1s. 6⅞d. a fortnight before, and this at once produced a better feeling, both here and in Manchester. It has since transpired that these council drafts on India were bought by French bankers, and that there were tenders very largely in excess of the offerings—some four or five times as large—which indicates a strong demand for remittances to the East. The course of Indian exchange seems destined to exercise a leading influence on the cotton trade generally for some time to come, and, as illustrating a Manchester view of this perplexing question, we give the following extract, taken from the Manchester Guardian of this date, which may interest our readers: 'We recently drew attention in our leading columns to the undue depression in the Eastern exchanges which the unsettlement in the price of silver had brought about, and pointed out that sooner or later the speculative dealings in exchange by which the depression had been occasioned would be reversed. The result of yesterday's sale of Indian bills seems to show that this reversal has already begun; and it will be interesting to see how far the reactionary movement will go—whether the rate of exchange will rise to a point at which it will remain comparatively stationary, or whether the recent advance will be succeeded by a series of fluctuations. The latter seems the more probable course. When once the speculative spirit has taken possession of any market, and has found profitable results, it is not easily eradicated, but remains long after the original causes of the fluctuation have ceased to exert any influence.'

"Holders, however, have waited so long for a return of activity, and have experienced so many disappointments from occasional reactions, of which much was hoped, but of which nothing came, that they now hesitate to believe in the permanence of the present movement, and are so far free sellers. It must also be noted that the long continuance of a low range of prices has brought about a complete change in public opinion as to the legitimate value of cotton. Prices that a year ago would have been scouted as absurdly low would now be considered high; hence we may expect that a moderate upward step in prices will subject the market to the manipulations of 'bear' operators. It would seem, too, to be doubted by many if even the present movement can be maintained without a continuance of activity in Manchester, of which there is no certain indication."

THE SCHOOL FOR BOYS.—Rev. F. M. Grace, A. M., once a professor in the East Tennessee University, and afterward president of Hiwassee College, puts into his paper, the Iron Age, Birmingham, the following notice:

"Hiwassee College closed its annual exercises May 25. We learn from the biennial catalogue that the number of students was one hundred and eighty-six, many of them from Alabama and other gulf States. 'There is no better school in the world for a boy than Hiwassee. Address President John H. Brunner, Hiwassee College, East Tennessee.'"

THE Ouachitas District Conference will commence on Thursday, October 12. Rev. R. S. Isbell will preach the opening discourse.

J. F. CRANE, P. E.

THE CAMP MEETING at the Holland camp-ground, on Pontchartrain circuit, Mississippi Conference, will commence on the twenty-eighth of September, and will continue about eight days. The camp ground is about fifteen miles from New Orleans, on the Southern road, and 151 miles from Enterprise, on the Mobile and Ohio road. It will be on the self-sustaining plan. There will be a good restaurant on the ground. Ample provision will be made for preachers and their families.

H. P. THOMPSON, P. C.

A CAMP MEETING, on the self-sustaining plan, will be held two miles north of Lake Moss, beginning on Thursday night, September 21.

C. McDONALD, P. C.

THE CAMP MEETING at Providence camp ground, five miles east of Sparta, on the Sparta circuit, will commence on Friday night, the first of September. It will be held on the self-sustaining plan. Preachers are specially invited to attend.

J. F. PATTERSON, P. C.

Sparta Circuit, Louisiana Conference.

WE EXPECT to hold a camp meeting at St. Matthew camp ground, four miles south of Hickory Mss., commencing on Friday, September 8. It is expected to be held on the self-sustaining plan.

J. D. HAYS.

ASHBY CAMP MEETING, in Marion county, on the Sepulga circuit, Alabama Conference, will begin on Thursday night, September 28, and continue till the first Sabbath in October. Let everybody attend the services. It will be on the self-sustaining plan. Ministerial brethren are cordially invited to attend. Any from a distance will find conveyances either from Greenville or Pineapple, on Thursday and Friday, by notifying the ut Forest Home.

J. M. SCOTT, P. C.

A CAMP MEETING will be held on Union camp ground, near Hallis's mill, ten or twelve miles north of Coushatta, commencing on Friday, September 29. A cordial invitation is extended to preachers and people. Preparation will be made to entertain persons from a distance. The self-sustaining principle will apply to those living near enough to tent.

JESSE FULTON, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Oak Grove, Carroll parish, La., beginning on the seventh of September, 1876. Preachers of the Delhi district, both traveling and local, are invited to come and assist us.

T. B. McCLENDON, Pastor.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Midway, ten miles north of Delhi, on the Floyd circuit, Louisiana Conference, beginning on the twenty-eighth of September, 1876. Ministers coming by rail will find free transportation from Delhi to the camp ground on the twenty eighth if the undersigned be duly notice, at this place.

T. H. McCLENDON, Pastor.

FLOYD, LA., July 17, 1876.

THE District Conference for Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, will be held at Port Gibson, beginning October 12. Preachers in charge will please forward me the names of delegates and local preachers who will be in attendance.

E. H. MOUNGER.

UNION CAMP GROUND.—Change of Time.—The time of holding the camp meeting at the Union camp ground, in the Grove Hill circuit, is changed from Friday, September 1, to Friday September 8. The meeting will not be self-sustaining, from the fact that there are so few tenters, though the invitation is still extended to all.

B. C. GLENN, Pastor.

GROVE HILL, ALA., July 10, 1876.

CAMP MEETING NOTICE.—There will be a camp meeting at Pilgrim's R. S., Philadelphia circuit, beginning on the first day of September next. Ministerial brethren are cordially invited to attend.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 26.—The fire last night destroyed Kelly's Block, four six-story buildings, Stoddard's upper range, three five-story buildings, Kelly's shed and wharf, the mainmast, sails, rigging and upper works of the schooner H. P. Simmons, and twenty-five bales of cotton. Loss, $200,000.

FOREIGN.

SALONICA, Aug. 22.—The officers implicated in the murder of the foreign consuls were formally degraded to-day before the public, and salutes were exchanged between the forts and the foreign men-of-war.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—Reports from Alexinatz are still confused and conflicting. The actual state of affairs, as far as known, is as follows: The Turks from Gurzusovalz, under Evanb Pacha, and the army from Nisa, under Ali Saib, have effected a junction, and on Sunday were four miles southwest of Alexinatz. Ali Saib's vanguard attacked the Servians on Monday, and met with a repulse.

Since that there had been no serious fighting down to early Tuesday morning, and Alexinatz had not been attacked.

The Bucharest correspondent of the Daily News says: Mr. Baring's report of sixty villages burned and 12,000 persons killed by the Turks, does not include the outrage committed in the district north of the Balkans, nor in the Sophia district.

Forty villages were burned north of Batkana, and seventy south. Mr. Schuyler has not completed his investigation, but estimates the killed at 15,000 in the Philippolis district alone. The regular troops were more cruel than the Bashi-Bazuks. No doubt the massacres were committed with the sanction of the authorities. Outrages continue.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Rome says: A convocation of cardinals is now sitting to ascertain the feasibility of introducing certain modifications in the system of electing a Pope, so that the electors may exercise liberty when it becomes necessary to elect a successor to the present Pope.

A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Paris says: News from Rome, received here yesterday, gives no hope of Cardinal Antonelli's recovery.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—A special dispatch to the Standard, from Alexinatz, says: Gen. Tchernayeff attacked at Ak Saik at noon on Wednesday. Twenty Servian battalions, with two batteries of artillery, passed through the valley leading northwest of Alexinatz to the Turkish headquarters.

The movement was discovered by the Turks, who went to meet the column. The Turks held their ground, although the Servians were superior in numbers. The losses of the Turks were heavy; nearly all their officers were killed or wounded. The Servians fought under the shelter of the forest, but at six o'clock in the evening retreated to Alexinatz. Their total loss was one thousand killed and wounded.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The Standard's correspondent at Rome, telegraphs: A dispatch was received from Athens, August 24, announcing that a revolt had broken out in Argyropolis, and that armed bands were forming in Albania, Thessaly and Epirus.

The Courrier de France has a dispatch from Vienna to the same effect, and adds: Musselmen Albanians having pillaged the suburbs of Janina, the Russian consul demanded justice of the governor, who refused. The consul and rich Greeks organized a force of volunteers, and a combat took place at Prevesa between the Greeks and Turks.

A special dispatch to the Daily News from Belgrade says: Gen. Tchernayeff has telegraphed Prince Milan that the Servians won a great victory on Thursday.

Gen. Horomavich abandoned pursuit of the Turks at Trestia, and attacked the rear of the Turkish right wing. Gen. Tchernayeff at the same time attacked the Turks in front. The Turks were routed with loss, according to Tchernayeff's dispatch, of 15,000 killed, wounded and prisoners.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 26.—The preliminary negotiations for peace opened last night between the foreign embassadors, in consequence of steps taken by Prince Milan.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The Standard's correspondent with the Turkish army telegraphs under date of Nisha, Sunday afternoon, as follows:

Yesterday's and to-day's severe fighting resulted in a complete Turkish victory. Servians were everywhere driven back and their losses must be very great.

A Tipperary man the other morning hailed a fellow-laborer with: "Say ye've got a baby at yer house. What is it—a boy or a gurl?" "Guess," "It's a boy." "No." "Well, then, it's a gurl." "Faith," said the delighted father, "somebody's been tellin' ye."

"If I place my money in the savings bank," inquired one of the newly arrived, "when can I draw it out again?" "Oh," responded his Hibernian friend, "sure, an' if you put it in to-day, you can get it out again to-morrow, by giving a fortnight's notice."

From the Work.

PEARLINGTON, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The work of salvation has been progressing on this circuit (W. W. Hopper, pastor,) from the beginning of the year. We bless God that the Seashore Camp Meeting has given it a fresh impetus. The third quarterly meeting, held at this place, commencing on last Saturday, is protracted, and has thus far been a great success. Twenty-four accessions to the church by profession of faith; preachers paid up to time; three of the Conference collections have been raised, with a surplus to each, and the fourth will meet a similar response when the effort is made. Thank God.

THOMAS PRICE.

PEARLINGTON, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, August 21, 1876.

GREENSBORO DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The sixth session of the Greensboro District Conference was held at Pushmatalia, Choctaw county, Ala., on the tenth instant, and was presided over by Dr. A. H. Mitchell, presiding elder of the district.

The undersigned was appointed secretary. The preachers were all present, excepting those stationed on Oak Cuppa circuit, Havana circuit and Demopolis station.

The preachers from the last two works reported in writing, being unable to attend for reasons given in their respective communications. No report from Oak Cuppa circuit.

The first reports made from the different works were on the spiritual condition of the churches. Taken altogether, I think the reports show a hopeful condition of the churches spiritually.

There have been accessions to the churches at all the stations and on the circuits. In some localities God has most graciously manifested his revival grace and presence. At Belmont Bro. McCain reported a great revival. Forty-five received into the church. Many of the young converts had gone earnestly to work in the Master's vineyard, some of them leading in public prayer. One of the young converts feels called to the work of the ministry, and is trying to make preparations for it.

The reports show the titles to most of the church property to be good, and the buildings, as a general rule, in good repair. The reports show that a good many copies of your excellent paper, a number of the Nashville Christian Advocate, and a few copies of the Episcopal Methodist are taken in the district.

There are a good many Sunday schools in operation, some in a very flourishing condition. Next to spirituality, and is greatly promotive of it, the Sunday school interest should be cherished and promoted. This is a great field, and it is gratifying that our ministers are giving close attention to it. The reports, however, show one unpleasant feature there are few stoves in the country churches. Hence the Sabbath schools are but kept up all the winter. It is strange that our people will do without stoves in winter when a levy of twenty cents to the head of the congregations of most of the country churches would supply the stoves.

The financial reports were tolerable; on some works they were very good. At most of the appointments the preachers have taken up some of the collections ordered by Conference. In some instances, however, the people seem disposed to postpone the missionary, conference, bishop and education collections until the amounts are raised for the preachers on these works.

The presiding elder did not agree with this policy, and urged upon the Conference the importance of taking up these collections. He showed that it was the duty of the people to give of their means to these objects, and insisted that they were of vital importance to the church.

Dr. Luther Smith, our able and pious chancellor of the Southern University, agreed with the presiding elder, and urged that though our people were poor they should not only feel it a duty but should esteem it a privilege to give into the treasury of the Lord. He referred to and commended the example of the widow who gave of her penury, and urged that nothing was lost by it.

The Conference was very harmonious and exceedingly interesting, and I believe a great good to the church will grow out of it.

On Saturday morning Dr. L. M. Smith made a most able address on education, in which he showed it to be the duty of Alabamians to patronize home institutions, that Christians should sustain the church institutions, and gave us conclusive reasons for it. He said that the faculty at Greensboro was a unit, and that institution should receive the support of the church—that it was worthy of it. The piety and learning of the faculty give assurance that education there will be thorough, and that the moral and religious character of the students will be developed.

Bro. Massey, president of Alabama Conference Female College at Tuskegee, Bro. Urquhart, president of male and female colleges at Greenville, and Bro. Holcomb, president of our college at Summerfield, made able and telling speeches on education.

When the writer left Pushmatalia a protracted meeting was in progress. Several persons have joined the church, and others desired prayers of Christians.

The next meeting of the Conference will be at Livingston, where the writer would be glad to see the editor of the ADVOCATE, and extend to you the hospitalities of the place and occasion. Yours truly,

J. COLLINS,
Sec. of Conference.

LIVINGSTON, ALA., August 19, 1876.

Crystal Springs Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: Our fifth annual meeting at Crystal Springs, Hemingston Camp Ground began Wednesday, August 2, and closed on Thursday morning, the tenth. Like those which preceded, it was an occasion of marked interest throughout—glorious in its results. God has wonderfully blessed this enterprise from the beginning. Eternity alone will reveal the amount of good accomplished.

At our recent meeting it was found that the number of tents had increased from seven at the first to fifty two. Vast improvements in the way of public accommodations had been made. Our congregation was largely in excess of former years. The multitude, however, was well provided for. There were more than forty ministers in attendance, including all grades from a bishop to licentiate traveling and local preachers. The administration of these holy men was faithful and powerful. The presence and ministration of Bishop Kerner at our camp meeting now for two years has been an event not only of interest and pleasure for his brethren, but of vast importance to the church. We hope to have him or some other one of our bishops with us every year.

There were twenty-nine added to the church at the camp meeting, and six joined at Crystal Springs the following Sabbath, making thirty-five, whom we may regard as the fruits of the camp meeting. Possibly scores may have gone to their homes in different charges deeply impressed, and joined the church elsewhere. Just one hundred publicly testified that they had found peace with God at the camp meeting. The church here at Crystal Springs, as well as the representatives of the church abroad, had a glorious season of refreshing. "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

JACKSON DISTRICT.

Whereas, There is ground to apprehend pecuniary loss to our preachers from the necessity of closing their pastoral year unusually early, by the twenty-fourth of November, the time fixed by the president, Bishop Wightman, for holding the session of our Annual Conference; And whereas, It is believed that the already too straitened circumstances of our preachers will be unsupportably aggravated thereby, therefore,

Resolved, That we respectfully petition Bishop Wightman to consider our necessities as thus presented, and change the time to the fifteenth of December, if his plan of the work makes it feasible.

A true copy as passed by the Conference.

JOHN T. CAMERON.

A lecturer, wishing to explain to a little girl the manner in which a lobster casts its stoff when he has outgrown it, said, "What do you do when you have outgrown your clothes? You throw them aside, don't you?" "Oh, no," replied the little one, "we let out the tucks." The lecturer confessed she had the advantage of him there.

We sincerely sympathize, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, with our beloved brother, the Rev. Joseph B. Cottrell, in the trial he has been called to endure. The death of his excellent sister, Mrs. Taggart, is indeed a mournful event. She was a woman of no ordinary character. Many will grieve at this announcement of her death. Bro. Cottrell writes us, Owensboro, Ky., August 18: "Eleanor Jane Cottrell, daughter of the Rev. Dr. Thomas Cottrell, was born in Orange county, N. C., September 25, 1818; was married to Dr. Robert L. Taggart, in Mesopotamia (now Ettaw,) Ala., November 23, 1837, and died at Memphis, Tenn., June 5, 1876. Mrs. Taggart was a woman of fine endowments of mind and spirit, attested by success in rearing creditably a large family. She was greatly endeared to all her relatives, and highly esteemed by hundreds that she taught. The better part of her life having been spent as teacher in female schools. It would be a grateful task to give an extended sketch of my own sainted sister, for her history was a most remarkable one, illustrative of the highest qualities of Christian womanhood; but to the public at large such things are not interesting, and those who knew her are already possessed of a knowledge of her virtues. Her husband, Dr. Robert Lewis Taggart, was an honored member of the medical profession—having charge, at the time of his death in 1850, of one of the districts of Memphis when cholera was epidemic in the city. They rest together now in Elmwood Cemetery—seven children living to cherish the memory of as devoted and affectionate parents as ever breathed."

The Well of the Leaf.

I forgot to mention the Well of the Leaf, near the entrance, in the Mosque of Aksu, and the pretty Moslem legend that "gave it a name," which Abd-el-Atti relates, though not in the words of the hand book:

"This well berry old: call him Well of the Leaf; water same as Pool of Solomon—healthy water. I like him very much. Not so deep as Bir-el-Arwah; that small well you see under the rock; they say it goes down in Gehenna."

"Why is this called the Well of the Leaf?"

"Once, time of Suleiman it was Omar, a friend of our prophet, come here to pray, and when he draw water to wash he drop the bucket in the bottom of the well. No way to get it up, but he must go down. When he was on the bottom, there he much surprised by a door open in the ground, and blue berry curious to see what it is. Nobody there, so he look in, and then walk through berry fast, and look over him shoulder to the bucket left in the well. The place where he was come was the most beautiful garden ever was, and he walk long time and find no end, always more garden, so cool, and water run in little streams, and sweet smell of roses and jasmine, and little birds that sing, and big trees and dates and oranges and palms, more kind, I think, than you see in the garden of his vice royal. When the man have been long time in the garden he begin to have fright, and pick a green leaf off a tree, and run back and come up to his friends. He show 'em the green leaf, but nobody have believe what he say. Then they tell him story to the kadi, and the kadi send men to see the garden in the bottom of the well. They not find any, not find any door. Then the kadi he make him shelter to the Sultan. Berry wise man, and he say so. I read it in our history: 'Our prophet say, One of my friends shall walk in Paradise while he is alive. If this is come true, you shall see the leaf, if it is keep green.' Then the kadi take examine of the leaf, and find him green. So it is believe the man has been in Paradise."

"And do you believe it?"

"I cannot say exactly where him been. Where you think he done get that leaf?" Old Hickory, in Atlantic Monthly.

WESLEY GROVE CAMP MEETING.—The exercises of this encampment, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of August 26, closed up very successfully on Wednesday morning, the sixteenth instant. The last week of the meeting was especially marked by a high degree of religious power and interest. Although the number of conversions about fifty in all, was not so great as at the camp of the preceding year, yet the success of a meeting is not always to be determined by its more immediate and apparent results. We doubt not influences have gone out from the late gathering at Wesley Grove that will tell happily upon the interests of our cause in Baltimore, and in all the country charges represented on that occasion.

The New York Christian Advocate of August 17, says: "Commodore Vanderbilt still survives, his condition being about the same as it was a week ago. There is no hope of his recovery. During his protracted illness he has made a profession of religion. His pastor, Dr. Deems, is almost constantly with him. The Rev. Dr. R. S. Moran has been spending several days in this city, having come here to visit Commodore Vanderbilt. But we have hope of his recovery from recent advices.

Rabia, a devout Arab woman, being asked, in her last illness, how she endured the extremity of her sufferings, answered, "They who look upon God's face do not feel his hand."

Origin of "He Has an Ax to Grind."

We owe more of our common sayings and pithy proverbs to Dr. Franklin than many of us think or know. We say of one who flatters or serves us for the sake of some secret, selfish gain or favor: "He has an ax to grind." In the doctor's "Memoirs" is the following story (much after the manner of the "whistle" story,) which explains the origin of the phrase:

Franklin says: When I was a little boy, I remember, one cold winter morning, I was accosted by a smiling man with an ax on his shoulder:

"My pretty boy," said he, "has your father a grindstone?"

"Yes, sir," said I.

"You are a fine little fellow," said he. "Will you let me grind my ax on it?"

Pleased with the compliment of "a fine little fellow," "O, yes, sir," I answered, "it is down in the shop."

"And will you, my man," said he, putting me on my head, "get me a little hot water?"

How could I refuse? I ran and soon brought a kettle full.

"How old are you, and what's your name?" continued he, without waiting for a reply. "Um, sure you're one of the finest lads that ever I have seen. Will you turn a few minutes for me?"

Tickled with the flattery, like a fool I went to work, and bitterly did I rue the day. At was a new ax, and I toiled and tugged till I was almost tired to death. The school-bell rung, and I could get get away. My hands were blistered, and it was not half ground. At length, however, the ax was sharpened, and the man turned to me with:

"Now, you little rascal, you've played the truant; send to school or you'll get it."

Alas! thought I, it was hard enough to turn a grindstone this cold day, but now to be called a little rascal was too much. It sunk deep in my mind, and often have I thought of it since.

When I see a merchant over-polite to his customers, begging them to take a little brandy, and throwing his goods on the counter, thinks I: That man has an ax to grind.

When I see a man flattering the people, making great professions of liberty and praising loudly some country, who is in private a tyrant, methinks: Look out, good people! that fellow would see you turning a grindstone.

When I see a man hoisted into office by party spirit, without a single qualification to render him either respectable or useful, alas! methinks: Deluded people, you are doomed for a season to turn the grindstone for a booby.

MOSQUITOES TAKES ESCAPED. The Brisbane (Australia) Courier of December 30, 1875, publishes the following official telegram from Mr. Walter Hill, the government botanist, dated from Cardwell on the twenty seventh, and received by the Queensland Secretary for Lands: "Since the twentieth of November we have examined the banks of the Mulgrave, Russell, Mossman, Daintree and Hull rivers, and have been more or less successful in suitable land for sugar and other tropical and semi-tropical productions. The ascent of the summit of Bellender Kerr was successfully made by Johnstone, Hill and eight troopers. At 4,000 feet in height we observed an undescribed tree, with crimson flowers, which excels the Poinciana regia and the Jacaranda ovalifolia. At 1,000 a tree fern, which will excel in grandeur all others of the Arborious class. A palm-tree at the same height, which will rival any of the British India species in gracefulness. On the banks of the Daintree we saw a palm tree cocoa which far exceeds the antipus specimen in the garden of the same genera from Brazil in grandeur and gracefulness. While sailing a given line on the banks of the river Johnstone, for the purpose of examining the land, an enormous fig tree stood in the way, far exceeding in stoutness and grandeur the renowned forest giants of California and Victoria. Three feet from the ground it measured 150 feet in circumference; at 40 feet, where it sent forth giant branches, the stem was nearly 80 feet in circumference. The river Johnstone, within a limited distance of the coast, offers the first and best inducements to sugar cultivation."

UNBELIEF.

There is no unbelief.
Whoever plants a leaf to push the soil,
And waits to see it push away the clod,
Trusts he in God.

Whoever says, when clouds are in the sky,
Be patient, heart! and knocketh by and by Trusts in the Most High.

Whoever sees, beath winter's field of snow,
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.

Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

Whoever says, "To-morrow," "The unknown
The future," trusts that Power alone
He dares not disown.

The heart that looks on when the eyes are close,
And dares to live when life has only woes,
God's comfort knows.

There is no unbelief;
And day by day, and night unconsciously,
The heart lives by that faith the lips deny.
God knoweth why.

Trip to the Centennial.

SUPERTA, MISS., Aug. 15, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: My leave for the Centennial Exhibition was for thirty days. I broke down in half the time.

I traveled near four thousand miles, saw Niagara, the Hudson, was two days in New York, five in Philadelphia, glimpsed the national capitol, and was back home in fifteen days; expenses of trip all told, $91.90.

Niagara Falls and interesting surroundings impressed me somewhere between the impressions made upon the minds of the Kentucky man and the New England man. One exclaimed: "God of grandeur, what a scene!" The other: "Gracious that would run a good large factory." We passed the Genesee country in the day, the finest agricultural portion of New York. I can hardly, even in fancy, picture a more beautiful country. Then down the Hudson, "the Rhine of America," presenting the finest combination of grand, sublime, and picturesque scenery of any river on the earth, and filled with historic interest. Its smooth bosom was the cradle that rocked steam navigation in its infancy. From Albany to Newburg, some sixty miles, is a sweep of most beautiful river scenery. Then the river seems to plunge in the very heart of the Highlands. Here grandeur commences.

Storm King, the first peak on the west bank, rises almost eighteen hundred feet above the river. Old Crow Nest, next to it, almost as high. For twenty miles the river winds among the Highlands. In this majestic reach are many points of historic interest. Here in the lap of these lordly hills rests the great military school of the nation. Just below West Point, and on the other side of the river, the beautiful residence of Hon. Hamilton Fish is seen. Near it is the Beverly House, where Arnold was taking breakfast with Alexander Hamilton and Gen. Lafayette when a letter was handed him, notifying him of the capture of Maj. Andre. He bade his family and guests a hasty adieu, took a boat at Beverly Dock, pulled down the river to Teller's Point, and was received upon the Vulture, the English man-of-war. Below this is Stony Point, jutting into the river from the west bank. It is covered by a light-house made in part from the remains of the old fort. Traitor's Hill, just below, is where Arnold and Andre met in the house of Joshua H. Smith.

Croton river on the east and Rockland lake on the west is New York's great water pitcher and cooler. Then you come to Sing Sing; and, five miles below, Sleepy Hollow and other places made famous by Irving's pen. Sunnyside, almost hid among the trees, is seen near the river. Then on the west bank begin the Palisades, stretching an unbroken wall for fifteen miles down the river, and rising, sometimes to six hundred feet. The eastern bank is thickly studded with the most magnificent private residences I ever saw. Here the wealthy retire in their splendid villas to linger out the evening of life; or, perhaps, the unfortunate failing of a $100,000 or more retires in solitude of velvety softness and silken splendor to this his wife's palace to beguile the tedium of the passing hours.

We pass the little valley Weehawken, where Burr, in 1804, killed Hamilton, and soon we are in New York. Among the points of interest visited there was Central Park with its winding walks, shady nooks, placid lakes, rustic bouses, sparkling fountains, zoological garden and museum. But the sight of sights, or show of shows, was the great Centennial Exposition. The main building glitters with the richest wares the greatest nations of the earth are able to produce. In the Chinese department I saw a $4,000 bedstead; among the jewels in the United States space I saw a $15,000 breast-pin, $80,000 necklace, diamonds, of course. I saw a vase of solid silver, beautifully carved, price, $25,000. It was about five feet at base and over four feet high. I heard the soft notes of the great Boston organ. I took more pleasure in the art department than any other. The piece of sculpture "Fleeting Time," by Barcalgia, of Milan, is very striking. Old Time, hour-glass in hand, is bending forward in his flight; a woman, bracing herself, would hold him, but he seems to say: "I must go." Near this is "Prayer," by Matelli, of Milan. It is a woman in devotional attitude with a white vail over her face. It is so natural that at a little distance from it it seems as though you could remove the vail from the statue.

"The Foundling," by Rogers, of New York, is a very striking piece. An old man with a lantern has just taken an infant from a basket, behind a fence covered with vines; near by stands a sad, anxious-looking female, with an old shawl gathered about her.

Among the oil paintings is a very striking one by Becker, of Paris. It is "Rizpah Protecting the Bodies of her Sons from the Birds of Prey." The picture is about twelve feet broad by twenty feet high. The seven young men were hanging by their hands from a tall gallows; Rizpah, with a club, was in the act of striking a large bird flying near the bodies. The "Anxious Mother," by Alsdell, of London, represented a ewe with two lambs, life-size, and more perfect to my mind than anything I saw by Landseer, even. Landseer has on exhibition a witty picture, "The Traveled Monkey." His monkeyship seems just landed from abroad. His friends and neighbors are crowding around him, and he is astonishing them with the wonders of his trip. I have mentioned only a few, and not the largest or most beautiful. Detail is simply absurd. In the annex to the art gallery alone sixty thousand square feet of wall is available for paintings, and I saw but little naked wall. Such an array of fine pictures was never exhibited in this land before.

I saw much that was interesting in the other departments. The school-house of 1776, simple and rude, contrasted with the fine brick school-house of to-day; the simple old flint and steel musket of 1776 with the fine guns of to day; the rude implements and workmanship of some of the isles of the sea in their savage state one hundred years ago in contrast with the workmanship of those isles under Christian influence to-day.

I remained there five days, completely exhausted myself, saw probably one fifth of the things exhibited. Hoping, sir, that you and I before the next Centennial may see grander buildings, more brilliant scenes, richer jewels than ever exhibited on this earth, I remain, as ever,

Yours, T. S. WEST.

Centennial Notes—No. 2.

SABBATH IN PHILADELPHIA.

MR. EDITOR: Methodism in Philadelphia is of a more strictly Wesleyan type than in any other city or country in the United States. In the Southern and Middle States, as long as fifty years ago, Methodists from this city were considered a peculiar people—peculiar in dress and in church manners, and in abstinence from habits and conversation of levity, and from singing those songs and taking those diversions which do not tend to the glory of God and the sanctification of the heart. My mother was one of them; hence I remember their peculiarities. They knelt when they entered the church, responded during prayer, and shouted when they felt happy. They always went to their weekly class meetings, took sacrament without gloves or jewelry, never cooked anything or visited or received visitors on the Sabbath day. If one of their boys got out of the yard on Sunday, except to go to church or Sabbath school, he was considered a good timber. Before Sabbath day came I had determined to hunt up these Wesleyan people, and to worship with them. We have no Wesleyan congregations in Alabama, and I doubt whether you have any in New Orleans—I mean old-fashioned Methodists, who conform strictly to the Discipline.

The marble church on Broad and Arch streets is the fashionable Methodist church of this city, and is crowded by strangers all the time.

The plainest people of our denomination, I am informed, worship at Wharton Street church. I went there in the morning, and was in time to hear the experience of some of the members. Class meetings are held during the week, and an experience meeting every Sabbath immediately before the sermon. The house is plain; the people are plainly dressed, and with the exception of the Sabbath school, which, during the regular church service, occupied the galleries, the congregation consisted mostly of aged persons. The old songs were sung to the old tunes, and the entire appearance of things indicated old Methodism. The service was simple, but earnest and spiritual. The sermon was very ordinary, and delivered with neither grace nor power.

In the afternoon I went to Bethel church, which is the revival, spiritual church of the Methodists in Philadelphia. Service is held here every night, except on Saturday night, and three times on Sunday. The house is large, of very pretty style of architecture, two stories high, with windows of special beauty, some of which are memorial windows. The deed to the property makes provision for the reservation of the front seats for the poor sailors and seamen and their families. A magnificent ship in full sail and beautifully painted is represented upon the wall behind the pulpit.

The windows, ceiling, galleries, seats, and everything else, had a fresh, cheering appearance. The occasion was the regular experience meeting—not a class meeting. They have these latter every night in the week. This was an experience meeting solely. The congregation was large; the whole house, aisles and all, was crowded. The people were of every class and of every age, except infants. The service consisted of song, prayer, and a few words of personal religious experience.

The singing was the best I ever heard anywhere. They use no instrument, but praise God with their tongues and voices. It beats choir music one hundred per centum.

The majority of persons present were young people. The talks were very short and in quick succession, except when there was song. No one seemed "ashamed of Jesus." They spoke confidently of having the "witness of the Spirit," of being "happy in the love of God," of "going on to perfection," and all such assurances of faith and of hope, many of them closing with shouts of joy. There was great rejoicing throughout the entire congregation, and several were converted to God during the meeting. Some who spoke had been redeemed from habitual drunkenness; others had been converted during a storm at sea, and were rescued from death; some were veterans in the service; others were recent converts; all spoke as witnesses of the love and mercy of God.

The service was solemn and spiritual, and still there was a freedom from restraint and form I have never witnessed elsewhere. The manifestations, both of word and of action, were positive and outspoken, but were humble and in good taste.

The brethren invited me to worship with them while here, and I have engaged to do so. I like their religion and their mode of worship. It is sensible and profitable. Everybody here has confidence in the religion of these people, because they are earnest.

Our strength and glory used to be in love-feasts and class meetings and revivals, and congregational singing and separateness from the world and the ways of the world.

Our peculiarities caused us persecution, but they brought us greatness and power at last. Now that we are numerous and respectable, let us not forget our former ways, or dishonor our cause and the memory of our fathers by a renunciation of the old landmarks.

In this centennial year, while the nation is paying tribute to the virtues and achievements of our forefathers, and all political parties are declaring their intention to bring the government back to the honest and economical administration characteristic of the government of Washington and Madison and Jackson, let the Methodist Church, now the most numerous and influential body of Christians in the United States, recognizing their departure from the simplicity of former years, abandon the pomp and fashion and formality of this day, and bring our beloved church back, in its forms and usages, to the days of the Wesleys, and of our fathers and mothers in Israel.

LEVI W. REEVES.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 17, 1876.

An old woman on the day devoted to St. Michael the Archangel, going into a church in Paris, where there was a representation of that saint discomfiting the devil, put one large taper close to St. Michael and another close to the fiend. "Woman!" exclaimed the priest, "you are making an offering to satan; you know not what you do." "I know what I am doing well enough," was the reply; "but as I do not certainly know where I am going, it is as well to have a friend everywhere."

"Between parents and their children there is so great a society of nature and of manners, of blessing and cursing, that an evil parent cannot perish in a single death." "Holy parents never eat their meal of blessing alone, but they make the room shine like the fire of a holy sacrifice; and a father's or mother's piety makes all the house festival and full of joy, from generation to generation."—Bishop Taylor.

A much-esteemed friend of mine, a naval officer, writes to me: "Here's one I never saw in print. Two jolly tars were one day passing St. Paul's, one of whom was trying to count the statues outside the building, when he remarked to his shipmate: 'Why, I allus thought as how there was twelve apostles.' 'Well, so there was, but you wouldn't have 'em all on deck at once, would you?'"

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST.

Oh, that my heart were clean indeed,
My spirit right within!
Then might I stand before my God,
All free from taint of sin.

I know I cannot put away
The sins that make me ache;
Oh, God of mercy, blot them out,
For Jesus' only sake!

I would be holy to the core
And center of my soul;
I would be filled with God and love;
Dear Jesus, make me whole.

Oh, thou, the spotless Lamb of God,
Nailed to the cursed tree,
Thy precious blood, 'tis writ, can cleanse
My all of sin from me.

Though e'en as scarlet be my sins,
Though like to crimson red,
They shall become as snow and wool,
For so my God hath said.

By faith I claim the promise mine,
And consecrate my soul
To him who wraps me in his blood,
And makes me pure and whole.

I wash me in the blood of Christ—
He shed it that I might;
And, as that blood is Jesus' blood,
I know it washes white.

NEW ORLEANS, August 30, 1876. S.

Health-Seeking.

MR. EDITOR: I left Enterprise on the first of June for the hill country of Mississippi and north Alabama in search of health, and, thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, I have to some extent found that inestimable prize. On Friday, the eleventh instant, I reached this place, known as Pleasant Site, east of Cedar Creek, Franklin county, Ala., and truly to me it has proved a pleasant site in more respects than one. My host's situation, dwelling and surroundings are truly a pleasant site, while he and his excellent wife, without any labored effort, render every one pleasant about them. My host, Hon. Sanderson Orr, lives in a large bend of Cedar Creek; his land level and very productive, as is most of the land on this creek, while at some distance east and west there are hills many and not very small. Cedar Creek is the east fork of Bear Creek, which enters into the Tennessee river at Eastport, Miss.; and which, with a judicious outlay of $3,000 or $4,000, might be made navigable for small boats for twenty or thirty miles.

The citizens here do not claim that Pleasant Site is an inland city, town, or, even a village, but a multum in parvo settlement, or many dwellings in a small circumference, having for its center two stores, a postoffice, a blacksmith shop, and a large church, well finished, and two stories high; the upper story owned by the Masons, and the lower by the Cumberland Presbyterians and Missionary Baptists; and by favor the Methodist Episcopal Church South occupy it one Sabbath in each month. And, sir, it is a pleasant sight to see how the three denominations love each other—they feel that they are one in Christ Jesus.

On my arrival here I found a Sunday school convention in session, or, more strictly, a Union Sunday school celebration, the third annual celebration held in the bounds of Frankford circuit. The celebration commenced on Friday morning, the eleventh instant. The Rev. J. C. Blanton, a Presbyterian minister, was appointed to deliver an address on Friday morning on "The Intention of Sunday Schools;" the Rev. J. W. White, a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Friday night, on "The Importance and Result of Sunday Schools;" the Rev. R. M. Perry, of the Baptist Church, Saturday morning, on "The Best Method of Conducting Sunday Schools." The Presbyterian minister failed to attend, and, not considering it safe to go out at night, I did not hear Bro. White's address. Those, however, who heard it, speak of it in the highest terms. On Saturday I heard the Baptist brother. He handled his subject well, and as a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. He held the large and densely-crowded audience spellbound for over an hour. After singing by the schools present, Bro. Stephenson, the presiding elder of the Florence district, took the floor, and delivered the most telling lecture to the Sunday school children that I ever listened to. The address and lecture were truly a feast of reason. After singing again there was an ample feast of the fat things of earth, well prepared by the noble ladies of the surrounding country, and equally well enjoyed by the six or seven hundred consumers. The balance of the day was agreeably spent in speeches and singing by the Sunday school children. The speeches were all appropriate, and the most of them well delivered. The songs and hymns sung were mostly selections from the Gem, and led by D. M. Gibson, a teacher of music.

Now, Mr. Editor, I think you will agree with me that this place is appropriately named, both as to situation and vision. I am told that fifty families live in hearing of the church bell; and, in addition to preaching and Sunday school all the year round, they have prayer meeting every Sunday night.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

DIED, at the residence of the writer in Marion, Perry county, Ala., at half-past two o'clock A. M., on Wednesday, July 12, 1876, MRS. C. M. BODDIE, maiden name Perry, aged fifty-four years. She was born in Halifax county, N. C., July 14, 1822; was married to Van R. Boddie April 14, 1841; was left a widow March 3, 1847, and in 1852 she came to Alabama with her two sons and two daughters. She settled in Perry county, where the rest of her days were spent in doing good, till it pleased the Master to take her to himself.

At an early age she gave her heart to her Savior, and for more than forty years she lived an exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a truly pious woman whose godly influence was felt wherever she moved. Being an inmate of my household for more than six years, I had an opportunity of knowing her well, and I can truly testify that she lived "the life of the righteous." In no unguarded moment, on no occasion, was she ever known to utter an unkind word about any one.

Totally devoid of all selfishness, she lived exclusively for the good of others and the glory of her Savior whom she so much loved. Her life, for the most part, had been one of bereavement and trial, yet amid all the seemingly severe dispensations of an all-directing providence the grace of God sustained her, and she was never known to murmur. Ever realizing that what God does is for the best, she meekly and humbly bowed with sweet submission to his will. Her two sons had preceded her to the Spirit land. The eldest, Samuel P. Boddie, a noble, gallant youth of scarce eighteen summers, the pride of her heart and the joy of her life, fell in defense of his country at Farmington, Tenn., where his remains still repose. This severe stroke fell heavily upon her heart, and instinctively she clung the closer to her surviving son, Van R. Boddie. In eleven short months, however, the death-angel came and Van was summoned to his reward. Leaning more solely now her total dependence upon God, and with truer confidence in his divine wisdom and goodness, she was enabled to say as Job said: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

For more than two weeks she lay upon a bed of anguishing, but not of suffering, for after the first three or four days of her illness all suffering ceased. Perfectly calm and rational to the last, she often spoke of the goodness of the Lord in not permitting her to suffer, but on the contrary making her so comfortable in her last moments, and said she, "it is just as I desired." When asked how she felt she said: "I am so comfortable, but a little weak. Everything looks so beautiful and bright." She expressed her sincere appreciation of every act of kindness done her by her children, grandchildren, sisters, brothers, and friends who were constantly by her bedside endeavoring to make her last hours brightest and happiest, as no doubt they were.

Just before her death she said to my wife: "My child, I thank God that he has spared me to raise my daughters; may he spare you to raise your children, raise them right." May it please God to answer this prayer.

Her last words were: "Going home, going home," and she died without a groan or a struggle, as quietly as an infant falling to sleep. Her son-in-law,

WILLIAM H. MASON.

WE were all startled, a few mornings since, by the sad and unexpected death of Bro. WILLIAM HOWELL. He had been in declining health for several months, but no one thought that his life was so soon to terminate. On the evening of the nineteenth instant, after having taken his usual meal, he shaved himself, as was his custom, and at the regular time he lay down upon a lounge that sat in the hall, where he commonly rested the first part of the night. The family retired, and all except Sister Howell were soon in sound slumber. About midnight he was heard to groan, but as he frequently did this no one suspected that anything was the matter; no sound after this broke the stillness of the night. The next morning his body was lying in its place, his eyes were closed, and his hand was lying upon his breast, as though he were asleep. His wife, supposing that he was oversleeping himself, called him, but no answer came. She then went to him and touched him, but it was only to find that he was cold and still in death. While he slept, with no guard but the angels and his two favorite and faithful dogs that lay one on each side of him, the summons came, and his spirit took its flight to that world where death comes not.

Bro. Howell was born near Goldsboro, N. C., September 14, 1810. He came with his parents to Cahaba, Ala., when quite a child, but shortly afterward the family settled in the village of Hamburg, Ala., where young Howell grew up to manhood. After this he lived a short time in Greensboro, Ala., but finally settled in Marion, Ala., where he lived to the day of his death. In 1838 he married Miss Louisa M. Markle, who lived but a short time afterward, leaving one child, who is yet living. In 1842 he married Miss Elizabeth A. Hines, who still survives him. He was the father of ten children, only one of whom has preceded him to the grave. In the same year of his last marriage he professed religion under the preaching of the sainted Dr. Hamilton, and immediately joined the Methodist Church, in which he lived a consistent and upright life till called from labor to reward. For a number of years he served efficiently as steward of the church, and he always paid his own assessment at the beginning of the year for the entire year. His liberality never stopped short of his ability. He gave something to every one that asked him, and him that would borrow he turned not away. He lived to see all his children members of the church, and a happy family he had till death severed from it. Now sadness lingers about home of the bereaved family, but sorrow not as those that have no hope. In death of Bro. Howell the church suffers the roll one of its most valued members, community loses one of its most worthy citizens, and the family sustains an irreparable loss. May a kind Providence comfort the bereaved widow, cheer the hearts of those that are orphans, and unite them again in the cloudless climes of eternal day.

MARION, ALA., July 27, 1876. J. E. D.

LATELY we referred editorially to the death of Mrs. T. W. DYER. A note from Bro. Dyer's mother informs us that Mrs. Clara Dyer died at her home in Greensboro, Ala., after a short illness of only seven days. During the last three days she was unconscious, but her life assured us that she was ready, that her lamp was trimmed and burning. She was an exemplary and useful Christian, always doing what she could for the Master's cause, in hearty sympathy with the church in all its work and enterprises. Her mother-in-law says: "Her daily life was a beautiful illustration of the Christian graces. As wife, mother and daughter, I have never met her superior." We can bear witness to the truth of this testimony. Sister Clara Goree, was born in Marion, Perry county, where she lived until her marriage, at which time of her marriage she was a member of the Baptist Church, but at once identified herself with the church of her husband. During our pastorate at Felicity street, New Orleans, she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. At the time of her death she was in her twenty-fourth year. She leaves her husband and two little girls. Young, beautiful and accomplished, she was fitted to shine in society, and did adorn every position she was called to fill. Her vivacity, cheerfulness, and womanly refinement shed light and joy over her home and all its inmates. Highly endowed, possessing artistic genius, taste and tact, she guided her house with prudence and discretion. Husband, relatives, and friends all realized that she was the center and ministering spirit of their domestic happiness. A family bereft of wife and mother under its roof could not otherwise than be singularly fortunate and greatly blessed. She has been taken from us prematurely as we would say, but may be so. God knows best, and he does all things well.

LIVE-PAGE.

CAPT. THOMAS B. POITEVENT was born in North Carolina, April 8, 1[illegible], while young he moved to Perry county, Miss., and at the age of [illegible] to Hancock county, where he married Miranda M. Batte, in 1850. He was a Baptist parish, La., and thence to Collin county, Texas, in 1860, and to Henrietta, at Chatfield, Navarro county, Texas, in 1870, where he lived till called to his better home on high, June 7, 1876. He was a boy, he joined the Methodist Church South, but by leaving the connection with the church he again attached himself in Texas, and lived an acceptable member of the Christian till the "Grand Master" called him from labor to refreshment. He was patient, protracted and severe suffering, while he bore with great patience and not a single murmur. He was a brave man, of great energy, of noble and kind heart, whose charity was as wide as the wants of suffering humanity. He lived the "golden rule," and was the great public benefactor that ever lived in that section of country. He was a strong friend, a devoted husband, and much loved father. In his religious life he was quiet and unassuming, but left evidence that his life was all bright. May God bless and support his bereaved and heart-broken companion, and finally bring her to the "home of the blessed," where loved ones will meet to part no more.

W. G. V[illegible]

MRS. MARGARET LOUISA W[illegible], only daughter of Mark and Elizabeth M[illegible], was born in St. Tammany parish, La., November 2, 1851, and died at the residence of her father, in Washington parish, Nov. 15, 1875. She was married April 1, 1[illegible] Thomas J. Wood, with whom she lived united and devoted wife for more than [illegible] years, when death called him away to the "land of pure delight." Immediately after his death she began to decline and consumption, before unperceived, made its [illegible] and destructive inroads upon her [illegible]. Excessive grief seemed to deprive her of every power of resistance, and greatly aggravated the disease. After a period of suffering of eleven months, both of body and mind, her lifeless body was placed by the side of her husband, and her spirit went to join his in a better land.

Sister Wood had many noble traits of character. As daughter, sister, wife, mother, meekness, trust, and forbearance were evinced in her life. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the summer of 1870, under the ministry of Rev. [illegible] Hyde; and though not demonstrative in her profession, yet she was unswerving in her allegiance to her Master. She turned her face Zionward, and thither seemed directed her footsteps. She never told any one that she was prepared to die, but from the unbroken consistency of her life we are sure that to-day she is in God's presence, crying "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts."

Four pretty children, pledges of a happy union, are left fatherless and motherless. God, be thou their help in time of need.

MR. EDITOR: By request of the church I send you the following for publication:

SISTER BETSY GREAK was born in [illegible] county, Miss., July 19, 1808. After her parents moved to Alabama she joined the Methodist Church at Pleasant Valley, Marion county, and was an acceptable member of that church until her death. She fell asleep to go to her reward among the saints, September 18, 1875, aged seventeen years.

Indian Begums.

The begums had begun arriving long before we were ready for them. They all came in close carriages, and as no gentleman could be permitted to have a look at them, all those of our party were banished to Mrs. D——'s study for the time, and the begums were asked to go up stairs on the roof of the house till our preparations were complete. I had heard so much of these begums that I felt extremely curious to see them, and was glad when everything was declared ready, and they were summoned downstairs. They very soon flocked into the room. Some were very handsomely dressed, while others, on the contrary, had nothing grand about them but their titles. The dress was peculiar, but not ungraceful. It consisted of trousers of silk or satin, quite very full and long (a couple of yards or more trailing on the ground,) and gored besides, so that it looked not unlike a trained skirt. To avoid being tripped, and having their fine clothes trodden on, they looped it up in festoons thrown over the arm, yet so that it still touched the ground, not having even the feet exposed. Over their heads they wore the usual chudder, or thoshla; some of common calico, others of silk or satin, richly embroidered with gohl and silver thread. The most handsomely dressed of all were two sisters. Their veils or chudders were so thickly covered with gold embroidery that they seemed to be woven of gold and silver thread, and were quite heavy and stiff. One of them—the elder one—let it fall from her head on to her neck, the better to display her jewels, I suspect. She had a splendid necklace on, and so many other ornaments adorned her breast and neck and arms that she was dazzling to behold. She was very fair in complexion for a native of India, and had a self satisfied and rather sensual look. Her sister was very different; she kept her gorgeous, heavy veil on her head, and seemed a modest, retiring woman, and a lady in her manners. She had a long, delicate, gentle looking face, pleasing, but not at all pretty. I was disappointed in not seeing a single beautiful or handsome woman among them all, and there were between sixty and seventy there. I saw a few, not more than two or three, who might have been called pretty; the rest were very ordinary looking women. Some one told me afterward that the beauties of a Mohammedan household are never allowed to cross the threshold of their homes, and this might be the reason we saw none. Some of these ladies had endeavored to beautify themselves in a strange way. They had powdered their foreheads and cheeks with what looked like gold dust prepared in some mysterious way, so that it could not easily come off. I saw a few who had frizzled their front hair; and one child begum, to make up for the want of hair, had a thick rope of yellow and red silk attached to the back of her head, and she looked so ridiculous.—Cobbe in Hours.

Some Glimpses of Walter Scott.

The first time I ever saw Walter Scott, my father and myself were riding slowly down Princes street, up which Scott was walking; he stopped my father's horse, which was near the pavement, and desired to be introduced to me. Then followed a string of cordial invitations which previous engagements and our work at the theater forbade our accepting, all but the pressing one with which he wound up: that we would at least come and breakfast with him. The first words he addressed to me as I entered the room were: "You appear to be a very good horsewoman, which is a great merit in the eyes of an old borderman." Every r in which sentence was rolled into a combination of double r and double e by his border burr, which made it memorable to me by this peculiarity of his pleasant speech. My previous acquaintance with Miss Ferrier's admirable novels would have made me very glad of the opportunity of meeting her, and I should have thought Sir Adam Fergusson delightfully entertaining, but that I could not bear to lose, while listening to any one else, a single word spoken by Walter Scott.

I never can forget, however, the description Sir Adam Fergusson gave me of a morning he had passed with Scott at Abbotsford, which at that time was still unfinished, and swarming with carpenters, painters, masons and bricklayers, was surrounded with all the dirt and disorderly discomfort inseparable from the process of house building. The room they sat in was in the roughest condition which admitted of their occupying it at all; the raw, new chimney smoked intolerably. Out of doors the whole place was still one chaos of bricks, mortar, scaffolding, tiles and slates. A heavy mist shrouded the whole landscape of lovely Tweedside, and distilled in a cold, persistent, dumb drizzle. Maida, the well-beloved staghound, kept lolloping in and out of his room. Walter Scott every five minutes exclaiming: "Eh, Adam! the puir brute's just wearying to get out;" or, "Eh, Adam! the puir creature's just crying to come in;" when Sir Adam would open the door to the raw, chilly air for the wet, muddy hound's exit or entrance, while Scott, with his face swollen with a grievous toothache, and one hand pressed hard to his cheek, with the other was writing the inimitably humorous opening chapters of the Antiquary, which he passed across the table, sheet by sheet, to his friend, saying: "Now, Adam, d'ye think that'll do?" Such a picture of mental triumph over outward circumstance has surely seldom been surpassed; house-builders, smoky chimney, damp draughts, restless, dripping dog, and toothache, form what our friend, Miss Masson, called a "concatenation of exterior ills" little favorable to literary composition of any sort; but considered as accompaniments or inspiration of that delightfully comical beginning of the Antiquary, they are all but incredible.—From Fanny Kemble's Autobiography in Atlantic Monthly.

Genius at Work.

If there is one fact more than another which strikes one in perusing the lives of great men, in any of the avenues which lead to distinction, it is the life of unceasing toil they lead, coupled with such an attention to details as less gifted men would have scorned.

Lord Macaulay's industry was untiring. He would spend hours in the library of the British Museum, hunting up what many would think an unimportant fact, and those who read his well-rounded periods little knew with what labor they were produced. His thrilling narrative of the Western rebellion was not written in his own study, but in a cottage on the Somerset marshes, in which he spent weeks, so that no detail to be gained from the spot might be wanting in his description. To this quality, more than any other, he was indebted for his fame.

Jeffrey, the original editor of the Edinburg Review, was an indefatigable worker. If he had not been, it is probable that the Review would have died in its infancy. That he had great difficulty in keeping his team in order appears from the following extract from a letter to Horner, asking for his contribution: "I have some right to dun, too, but merely because I am the master to whom your service is due, but because I have myself sent fifty pages to the press before I ask you for one. Hear now our state, and consider: Brown has been dying with influenza, and forbidden to write for his chest's sake. Brougham is roaming in the streets, or correcting his colonial proofs, and trusting everything to the exertions of the last week, and the contributions of the mulled geese who gabble under his wings. Elmsley—even the sage and staid Elmsley—has solicited to be set free from his engagements. And Timothy refuses to come under any engagements, with the greatest candor and good nature in the world."

Byron said that Sheridan had written the best comedy, the best opera, the best farce, and delivered the best speech known. He appeared to his friends as a brilliant wit and writer, producing bon mot speech or play without effort. But when Moore published his manuscripts after his death, it was discovered that all was the product of toil and elaboration. The wit he had been conning over in the morning he would wait patiently to introduce in such a manner that it appeared an inspiration; and his speeches were often written several times over and committed to memory. Such a sentence as the following would be written many times before he was satisfied with it: "His Bonaparte are no ordinary fortifications. His martello towers are thrones; scepters tipped with crowns are the palisadoes of his intrenchments, and kings are his sentinels." The dialogues in his plays were elaborated in like manner.

Moore spent nearly eighteen months reading up Greek and Persian works for Lalla Rookh, and the result was that it exhibited such fidelity to Oriental manners, customs and scenery that its popularity even in the East was extraordinary, and people found it difficult to believe that its scenes were not penned on the spot. The circumstance of this poem, with its gorgeous Oriental scenery and sentiment, being written during the dead of winter in a so-called dwelling in Derbyshire, is in itself a marvel. Many of Moore's songs were also the product of much labor. On one occasion he wrote to Power: "You will hardly believe that the two lines which I had, with many hours of thought and glove tearing, proposed to insert in the vacant places, displeased me so much when I read them yesterday that I am still at work for better. Such is the easy pastime of poetry!"

An English admiral used to be fond of relating that, on first leaving a humble lodging to join his ship as a midshipman, his landlady presented him with a Bible and a guinea, saying: "God bless you and prosper you, my lad; and as long as you live never suffer yourself to be laughed out of your money or prayers."

The young sailor carefully followed this advice through life, and had reason to rejoice that he did so.

"Never let your honest convictions be laughed down. Be true to yourself, and in the end you will not only be respected by the world, but have the approval of your own conscience.

Once upon a time there lived an old couple, known far and wide for their domestic difficulties. Suddenly they changed their mode of life and were as complete patterns of conjugal felicity as they had formerly been of discord. A neighbor, anxious to know the cause of such a conversion, asked the wife to explain it. She replied: "I and the old man have got on well enough together ever since we kept two bears in the house." "Two bears!" was the perplexed exclamation. "Yes sure" rejoined the old lady; "bear and forbear!"

The proverb has its origin in the nature of man, and is admirably adapted to the wants of social life, especially in its earlier stages. The proverbs current among a people unquestionably have no small influence upon their character. They are to the morals of a nation what gold coin is to its currency portable, rich, and always passable; or, as Cicero says: "They are the salt-pits of a nation, treasured preservatives against corruption."

"There must be classes!" Very true; but think how mysterious and often unaccountable it is, that lottery of life which gives this man the purple and fine linen, and sends to the other rags for garments and dogs for comforters.—Vanity Fair.

If you have built castles in the air your work need not be lost; this is where they should be. Now put foundations under them.

The value of the diamonds exported from the Cape of Good Hope last year amounted to about two millions sterling.

Religious Intelligence.

—The progress of missions in the South Sea Islands has been remarkable the past year.

—The total number of members of Baptist churches in England is estimated at about 240,000.

—Among the graduates in the class of 1876, at Dartmouth College, was Rev. J. S. Small, a Baptist clergyman about fifty years of age. This instance is, we believe, without precedent in the history of American colleges.

—The Baptists have an association among the Creek Indians comprising thirty-two churches, besides an association among the Choctaws, Chickasaws and Cherokees, and also a church organized among the Seminoles.

—Recent letters from Oroomiah and Tabriz, Persia, report a steady increase in the interest of Mohammedans in the gospel. Everywhere they are ready to listen, and, while the movement is not yet ripe, the prospects are good for large accessions in the course of time.

—The receipts of the London Missionary Society for the year 1875 6 were larger than ever before, amounting to $551,270. The annual report, however, refers to a decrease of missionaries. Only five new missionaries were sent out, while ten were in various ways withdrawn from the service.

—The church at Kobe, Japan, increases steadily. Nineteen adults were baptized on the last Sunday in April. The members of this congregation are active, and have been greatly encouraged by the marked progress which the gospel is making around them.

—One of the largest mission presses in the world is that of the Presbyterian Board at Shanghai, China. In 1874 it issued nearly 30,000,000 pages. The large dictionaries of Dr. Williams and Dr. Hepburn, and a great variety of religious and scientific works, have been printed at this establishment.

—Another victim has been added to the rapidly lengthening line of sufferers for the gospel in Mexico. Rev. Mr. Phillips, of the Presbyterian mission, on proposing to preach in Queretaro, was attacked by a mob. He was pursued into church, where he had sought refuge, and struck down with twenty wounds, from which it is doubtful whether he will recover.

—The missionary report of the United Presbyterian Church, for the year ending April 30, 1875, is as follows: Received from all sources, $67,467.80; whole amount expended, $62,529.30. The following were the general statistics of work on the first of the current year: Four missions—Syria, India, Egypt and China; 33 stations; 17 foreign and 3 native ordained missionaries; 21 female missionaries and assistants; 42 preachers and helpers; 785 communicants; increase during the year, 212; scholars, 2,581.

—The Bishop of Exeter, England, speaking recently at a meeting in Exeter in aid of a movement to augment poor benefices, said there was at present great difficulty in filling many livings, unless men who had some slur on their character were accepted, and such men he considered it most undesirable to have; and even when they succeeded in filling the livings, those who accepted them often got into debt and difficulty, for it was practically impossible for them to make both ends meet. This was a state of things so unsatisfactory that everything possible should be done to remedy it.

—Dr. Sargent narrates the following incident in the Church Missionary Intelligencer, which may serve as a fair instance of the difficulties which attend the conversion of high-caste Hindoos. One of these, named Manikam, became much interested in the gospel, after having listened to a conference held by a convert with a number of heathen at Palmacottah. In order to meet with less opposition he betook himself to Dr. Cahlwell's station at Edeyenguly, and there prepared for baptism. Meanwhile his uncle, a government official, was biding his time, and during Dr. Cahlwell's absence visited his relative. Having enticed him off the mission compound, under pretense of a confidential interview, he got his followers suddenly to lift Manikam into a bandy and drove off with him. After a while a marriage was arranged for him with a heathen lady, and his relatives supposed that they had saved him from becoming a Christian. The young man's purpose, however, remained fixed, and he called several times upon Dr. Sargent, at Palmacottah, in order to press his request for baptism. One day the missionary determined to ask how far Manikam had advanced toward the idea of Christian fellowship, unfettered by caste distinctions. He said to him: "I am your spiritual teacher. Here is a tumbler, clear as crystal, and the water put into it will look just as clear and clean. Suppose I call my servant and tell him to fill it from yonder pitcher. Will you as a disciple take it from my hands and drink it?" The man was very greatly distressed at the proposal, and answered: "Oh! sir, I have never done such a thing, and never thought of doing it." The missionary then reminded him that if he became a Christian it would be necessary for him to do even more than this, when the one sacramental cup was handed to all, without distinction of caste. After they had prayed together the young man went away. In a few days he returned, his face all radiant with delight, and said: "I have done it, sir; and I have done more! I have eaten with Christians—white men, too, of a different caste; and I feel I have relieved my mind of a great burden." After his baptism the door of his home was closed upon him and his wife was sent away to her parents. From comfortable circumstances he was at once reduced to a penniless condition. The native Christians immediately took his case in hand, and provided for him until he was able to find his present employment as a Tamil Munshi.

Our Young People.

TWO OF THEM.

BY CARRIE W. THOMPSON.

A brook and wee Elsie
Were playing together,
One holiday time day
In the sunshiny weather.
All rosy and bright-eyed
Naughty creatures were they
For the brook and wee Elsie
Had both run away.

One time, when they passed
Its lovely cool place,
Elsie saw in the water
Her round dimpled face.
And "How funny!" she said,
With a wondering look
"Now, how could my face
Get into the brook?"

A half-minute later
A gypsying face
Met Elsie in hers,
Grey object to see.
"Here's another queer problem,
The little brook cries.
"Now, how did I ever Get into her eyes?"

From Our Little Friends.

CONCORDIA, MISS., AUG. 12, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: As you are kind enough to devote a column of your good ADVOCATE to the children, and we see so many little girls writing to you, we, too, have concluded to write a short letter for the Child's Corner, as we are schoolmates and cousins. We are now going to school to Miss Lula Conerly. She is related to us both. There is no Sabbath school in our neighborhood at present, but our day school is very interesting. We recite a Bible lesson every morning, and repeat verses during the day to obtain extra marks. The one that has the most perfect marks at the end of school will receive a nice Bible as a prize. Each one is striving to win the prize. Tell Miss Cary Sadler it was John the Baptist that ate locusts and wild honey. It is found in Mark, first chapter, sixth verse. I will also ask the little girls and boys a Bible question. Where is the word girl found in the Bible? It is in the Old Testament, and is only mentioned once. They must do as we did—receive no help from any one. "Search and ye shall find."

SOPHIA AND SALLIE.

PLEASANT GROVE, MISS., AUG. 13, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been wanting to write you a letter for some time, but have put it off until now. I want to tell you a little about our Sabbath school. My father is the superintendent, and has been for more than seven years. All the children love him very much. A great many of our scholars belong to the church. I have been a member for more than two years. We have church here two Sundays in each month, and prayer meeting every Sunday and Wednesday night. Our pastor is Mr. W. W. Hopper. Everybody likes him "he is such a good man. He has done a great deal of good since he has been here. He talked to the Sunday school children last Sunday about some rivers and songs in the Bible. Our presiding elder is Rev. Thomas Price. He is a lovely old man. We are to have a quarterly meeting here the third Saturday and Sunday in this month. We are anticipating a season of religious enjoyment. I am afraid I will worry you with this letter, so I will close.

Your affectionate friend,

MARY ELLEN BROWN.

NATCHEZ, MISS., AUG. 15, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I thought that you would like to know how we are getting along at our Sunday school. We have a pretty good attendance every Sunday, and have a missionary society. Nearly every scholar in the school belongs to it. The Sunday school is raising money to put the weights in the windows of the church. I have been a member of this Sunday school for three years and four months. Our teacher, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, and wife, have gone to visit his father. He will be gone about a month and a half. I remain yours, very respectfully,

ADRIAN TRIMBLE.

The Florence Fund.

Some time ago we published a statement of this fund that it amounted to $5, or thereabouts, and that we had turned the money over to foreign missions. This closed the matter. If any of our young friends have money for missions we advise them to give it to their pastor, and he will report it in his collections.

How Girls Can Learn to be Housekeepers.

Begin with your own possessions. Reform your upper bureau drawer; relieve your closet pegs of their accumulation of garments put off use a month or two ago. Institute a clear and cheerful order in the midst of which you can daily unve and learn to keep it so that it will be a part of your toilet to dress your room and its arrangements while you dress yourself; leaving the draperies you take off as lightly and artistically hung, or as delicately folded and placed as the skirts you loop carefully to wear, or the ribbon and lace you put with a soft neatness about your throat. Cherish your instincts of taste and fitness in every little thing that you have about you. This will not make you "fussy." It is the other thing that does that—the not knowing, except by fidgety experiment, what is harmony and the intangible grace of relation.

Take upon yourself gradually—for the sake of getting them in hand in like manner, if for no other need—all the cares that belong to your own small territory of home. Get together things for use in these cares. Have your little wash cloths and your sponges for bits of cleaning; your furniture brush and your feather duster, and your light little broom; and your whisk and pail; your bottle of sweet oil and spirits of turpentine, and piece of flannel to preserve the polish, or restore the gloss, where dark wood grows dim or gets spotted. Find out, by following your surely growing sense of thoroughness and niceness, the best and readiest ways of keeping all fresh about you. Invent your own processes; they will come to you. When you have made yourself wholly mistress of what you can learn and do in your own apartment, so that it is easier and more natural for you to do it than to let it alone, then you have learned enough to keep a whole house, so far as its cleanly ordering is concerned.—Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, in St. Nicholas.

A Little Every Day.

The longest life is made up of simple days—few or many; but the days grow into years, and give the measure of our lives at the last.

The life is at the last what the days have been. Let the children, therefore, look after the days one day at a time—and put into each one something that will last—something worth doing, something worth remembering, something worth imitating by those who follow us.

1. Every day a little knowledge. One fact in a day. How small a thing is one fact! Only one! Ten years pass by. Three thousand, six hundred and fifty facts are not a small thing.

2. Every day a little self-denial. The thing that is difficult to do today will be an easy thing to do three hundred and sixty days hence, if each day it shall have been repeated. What power of self-mastery shall he enjoy who, looking to God for his grace, seeks every day to practice the grace he prays for!

3. Every day a little helpfulness. We live for the good of others, if our living be in any sense true living. It is not in the great deeds of philanthropy that the only blessing is found. In "Little deeds of kindness, repented every day, we find true happiness. At home, at school, in the street, in the neighbor's house, on the playground, we shall find opportunity every day for usefulness.

4. Every day a little look into the Bible. One chapter a day. What a treasure of Bible knowledge one may acquire in ten years! Every day a verse committed to memory. What a volume in the mind at the end of twenty-five years!"

DANGER TO THE VINES.—While I was walking in the garden one bright morning a breeze came through and set all the flowers and leaves a fluttering. Now that is the way flowers talk, so I pricked up my ears and listened.

Presently an elder tree said:

"Flowers, shake off your caterpillars."

"Why?" said a dozen all together, for they were like some children who always say "Why?" when they are told to do anything. Bad children those.

The elder said:

"If you don't they'll gobble you up."

So the flowers set themselves a shaking till the caterpillars were shaken off.

In one of the middle beds there was a beautiful rose, who shook off all but one, and she said to herself:

"O that's a beauty. I'll keep that one."

The elder overheard her, and called out:

"One caterpillar is enough to spoil you."

"But," said the rose, "look at his brown and crimson fur, and his beautiful, black eyes, and scores of little feet. I want to keep him. Surely one won't hurt me."

A few mornings after I passed the rose again. There was not a whole leaf on her; her beauty was gone, she was all but killed, and had only life enough to weep over her folly, while the tears stood like dewdrops on her tattered leaves:

"Alas! I didn't think one caterpillar would ruin me."

One sin indulged has ruined many.—Christian Weekly.

There are few jokes that make better fun than secretly piecing out a friend's unfinished line. The trick is a practical and verbal joke in one, and harmless, unless a sacred beginning is burlesqued by a ridiculous sequel.

It is related of Dr. Mansel that when an undergraduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, he chanced to call at the rooms of a brother Cantab who was absent, but who had left on his table the opening of a poem which was in the following lofty strain:

"The sun's perpendicular rays
Burn up the depths of the sea."

Here the flight of the poet, by some cause, stopped short, but Mansel, who enjoyed a joke, completed the stanza thus:

"And the fishes, beginning to sweat,
Cried: 'Confound it, how hot we shall be!'"

To have our hearts balanced on God as their center, and so balanced that under the ruder touches of temptation they may be moved to and fro like the nicely-poised stones of the Druids, but, like those stones, always return again to their rest—that is to be blessed indeed—to be blessed like the psalmist who said, after some rough onset of Satan: "I shall not be greatly moved."

William E. Baker has given to a board of trustees in Boston a farm of fifty acres and $50,000 for the purpose of establishing a college of cookery.

Old and New Methodism.

Our people are often sharply lectured for their departure from the old paths, and some writers and preachers are always ringing the changes upon the defection of this generation from the stricter practices of the fathers. We have need, no doubt, to go back occasionally to the primitive days, and to mark and pattern after what was most excellent. But, after all, we do not think the former times were better.

In our doctrines we are the same, our pulpits and press mind the same things and walk by the same rule. The necessity of the new birth, the witness of the Spirit, and going on to perfection are fully exhibited. Class meetings may have fallen off in some sections, but in many churches, and, we trust, in the most, they are kept up, and the love-feasts, we believe, are everywhere observed. The old times certainly had no advantage over us in prayer meetings. They were not more regularly held, nor more spiritual. Then, it must be remembered that sixty years ago there were no Sunday schools to speak of, Methodist schools and colleges scarcely existed, and the subject of foreign missions occupied but little attention in comparison with the present magnitude of this enterprise. Sunday schools, education, and missions are the achievements of new Methodism in the main. We might also point to the enlargement of our publishing interests, to the better support of the ministry, although still below the standard of ability and justice, to the improvement in church building, and to the general advance in the grace of giving. These things should go for something, surely, when the mood is on us to censure and scold the churches as we find them now.

In religious experience the measure of numbers is greater, but we doubt whether the proportion of chaff to the wheat is greater than formerly. The demonstrations peculiar to what is called "the old-fashioned conversion" were most natural and common in those days when the mass of the converts were without Sunday school privileges, or religious privileges of any kind. The gospel came to them as it never can come to children who have had religious home training, whose habits of belief and prayer have never been interrupted, and who, from earliest years, have been familiar with the Scriptures, and have constantly participated in public and social worship. Repentance for the man who has lived in sin, and whose thoughts have never been directed to the subject of religion, may well be a mighty convulsion, and as the throes of an earthquake, while he who has been raised in the church, and has lived in its light, comes into the conscious peace of faith with a quiet joy which scarcely stirs the outward demeanor. We may count people as converted sometimes when they are not, and it is well to discount most revival reports to some extent. But this was so under the preaching of the apostles, and Wesley, and Asbury, and other pioneers had occasion to lament over it. The true old-fashioned conversion was a conversion that reformed the man and led to a new and holy life. We have long ceased to judge of the genuineness of a conversion by the outward demonstrations of the occasion. We can point to good and exemplary Christians, some of whom went through a great and bitter agony, and others whose cup of wormwood and gall was not consciously so very bitter; to some who were overwhelmed with the wonderful light, and to others upon whom the day dawned sweetly and quietly, but not with a suddenly overpowering effulgence.

The fact may be assumed that the conversions of these days are as thorough, scriptural, and powerful as in the olden time. If the mere phenomena are not as violent, it is owing to the better training and greater privileges of those who throng our altars of prayer. For deep, intelligent experience in the things of God, it is questionable whether the average is not above what it was a half-century ago. We have not read better in the old Methodist books, tracts and magazines than some we have heard from living Methodists within the last six months. We imagine the proportion of those going on to perfection, and of those who have attained it, is as great as it ever was.

Our administration of discipline may be less vigorous and vigilant than under our fathers. Preachers are, perhaps, not as careful in the reception of members, nor so justly severe in turning them out. Our people trench upon the rules concerning gold and costly apparel. This ought not to be, but then they give more to Christ than they used to do, and some allowance may be made on account of the altered circumstances and conditions of society.

We have not space to say much about the preachers. Our bishops do not live on $6 a year, nor do they travel across the continent on horseback. Their labors are apostolic, notwithstanding, and mentally and physically more exhausting than those performed by McKendree and Roberts. The sacrifices made every year by the rank and file of the preachers are equal to any standard of heroism. The preaching is not inferior, either in unction or in mental power. We could institute comparisons between the leading pulpit men of this day and those of sixty years ago. This the reader can do himself, and, we are sure, not to the disadvantage of new Methodism.

We have reason enough to mend our ways in some respects, and to recall the past, but there is progress beyond the old, and also beyond the new. We have little sympathy with that chronic discontent that is ever harping upon the old, and drawing unfavorable contrasts. The fathers had their imperfections, and we have ours, but to say that ours are greater is more than truth. It is, at any rate, our privilege to gather up the wisdom of the past and the present, and to press on to a still nobler future.

Censurable Silence.

We are opposed to all violence and bloodshed by whomsoever initiated. We have uniformly counseled peace. We heartily accept Paul's inspired precept: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." Under wrong, and slander, and peril, we think this good Christian practice: "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourself, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written: Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."

Our news columns contain the outrage items to some extent. The Hamburg affair was given at the time as it came from the press dispatches. Others wherein the negroes are more clearly in fault are sometimes published. It is not easy at once to determine where the immediate blame lies. Until there is fair and impartial judicial investigation, it is perhaps allowable to hold our judgment in suspense. At any rate we are not to be forced into a premature denunciation of the white people of the South by the clamor and innuendoes of Northern religious partisans.

The road to peace and security in the South is so clear and plain that he that runneth may read. Carpet-bag and negro government is a proved failure. Where the Conservative, intelligent, element rules, as in Arkansas, Tennessee, Georgia, Texas and Alabama, life and property are as secure as in Illinois or New York. This would be the case in South Carolina and Louisiana, but for the bayonet regime to which they have been subjected. While we condemn all violence, even when resorted to under great provocation, we believe that the bloody emeutes which occasionally break out are due to the kind of government which United States soldiers have imposed upon us. As we quoted last week, Mr. Redpath declares that it is a system of government "which no white face on the face of this earth either ought to endure or will endure." And yet the President is getting the military machinery ready to trample on the Constitution, and to perpetuate a reign of turbulence and desolation.

However guilty the immediate actors in those conflicts may have been, the blood of Coushatta and Hamburg, and many other brawls of less note, is upon those who have foisted upon these States governments controlled by unprincipled white adventurers and ignorant negroes. Silent sorrow and regret may be pardoned in those who deprecate these scenes of blood, while they are helpless to prevent them, and while they are convinced that the very men who take us to task, and lay all the guilt at our door, are themselves largely responsible before God for the blood of the slain. A just conception of the Southern situation, and a righteous treatment of it, would have long since given quiet and security to all classes in these misgoverned States.

Apples of Gold.

Solomon was evidently acquainted with our queen of fruits—the orange. Else why that mouth-watering and mouth-correcting proverb: "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Then can there be any doubt that the golden apples which Terra gave to Juno as a wedding gift, and which the Hesperides guarded, were oranges? The orange, therefore, has a place in the sacred word, and also in the most striking chapter of Grecian mythology. That Eve was tempted by an apple we have never believed. It must have been the orange. No fairer tree grows, graceful in its form, its foliage of enameled green, its blossoms of virgin purity breathe intoxicating perfume, and the full-orbed golden fruit challenges and defies comparison. We are not surprised that Eve wanted it, nor that Hercules and Atlas conspired to overpower the Hesperides and to gain possession of it.

Orange culture in Louisiana is reviving. A few weeks ago we paid our friend, W. R. Stuart, of Ocean Springs, a pop call, and, of course, we visited his fine nursery and orange grove. It is located on the point where Fort Bayou comes into the bay of Biloxi, and perhaps a mile and a half from the railroad depot. The place comprises twenty acres, about one-half of which is in cultivation. The standard trees are numerous and flourishing, mostly young, and some of them just coming into bearing. The nursery contains, if we remember rightly, as many as thirty or forty thousand trees, of various kinds of the orange. There are the Brazilian, the Mandarin, and the best varieties of the American; also in profusion the grafted, budded, and seedlings. Bro. Stuart has given much time and labor to this enterprise, and is succeeding admirably. He seems crammed with orange lore, and we concluded that he had gathered about all that is worth knowing concerning orange culture. Our failure with the orange in this country is doubtless chiefly owing to our ignorance of the culture and care of it. About Ocean Springs, and along the gulf coast everywhere, we noticed that renewed attention is being given to the subject, and that extensive orchards are set with young and thrifty-looking trees in many places. The orange is destined to be the chief fruit of the coast and of southern Louisiana, and we have no doubt the culture will prove a profitable investment to those who choose eligible locations, protected by water exposure, and give careful and painstaking attention to the business. It takes time—say ten or fifteen years—to get good bearing trees from the seed, and those who would reap must plant betimes. It is best to procure trees already well started, from two to three years old, and even older if it can be afforded.

The Fraternal Commission.

The following dispatch announces that the commissioners of the two churches have concluded their labors, that they have arrived at a settlement of every point, and that harmony of views on vital points has been realized:

CAPE MAY, Aug. 23.—The boards of commissioners appointed by the Methodist Episcopal Church North and the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to remove all obstacles to fraternity between the two churches, have been in session at Congress Hall during the last ten days. They concluded their labors this evening, and issued a lengthy address to the bishops, the ministers and other members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which they give generally the results of the session, which address states that if any in the churches entertained the fear previous to our meeting that we could not attain complete harmony of sentiment touching the momentous questions to be determined, they will be rejoiced to learn that after having given due attention to all questions involved in the proper construction of a platform of complete fraternity between the two great branches of the Methodists in the United States we have arrived at the settlement of every point affecting, as we suppose, the principles of a lasting and cordial adjustment. We have the satisfaction to declare that our aspirations for harmony of views on vital points have been realized. By divine guidance, as we trust, we have been able, after a frank interchange of views and prayerful endeavors, to harmonize all differences, and to arrive at the desired consummation of a unanimous agreement of complete fraternity.

Comment in advance of the address mentioned in the dispatch and of more detailed information would be out of place. We sincerely wish that a satisfactory settlement of all questions in dispute has been reached. With these questions out of the way, and with fraternal relations established between the General Conferences, good feeling and a good understanding will prevail everywhere after a while. Sectional prejudice and political asperities will hinder cordial relations much more than anything denominational. We trust that time and a better spirit may remove all local friction, and that the two great Methodist bodies, ever distinct and separate, may fulfill their common mission of spreading scriptural holiness over this and every land.

Since the above was written the address of the commissioners has come to hand, but too late for this issue of the ADVOCATE. The address will appear in our next number.

DEATH OF MRS. ANN CLINTON.—Through a note from her son, Thos. P. Clinton, Esq., of this city, we learn that Mrs. Ann Clinton, widow of Rev. Thomas Clinton, died at the residence of her son in-law, Rev. W. E. Ballard, at Beauregard, Miss., at four o'clock P. M., on Thursday, August 17. She was buried at the old homestead in St. Helena parish, La., by the side of her venerated husband. Sister Clinton was born in South Carolina, November 9, 1807. She was a mature Christian, a woman of great strength of character, and a model in all her social and domestic relations. Within the last two years she met with heavy sorrows. Her son James, a most worthy Christian gentleman, was killed by a negro assassin, and her husband's death followed not long after. In Sister Clinton a venerable and saintly woman, a mother in Israel, has passed away. Like her husband, she died full of years, honored and blessed by her children, loved and lamented by all. An obituary sketch will be furnished soon.

Debate on the Lottery Bill.

The bill was to amend sections of the revised statutes providing a penalty for mailing obscene books, and other matters therein contained, and prohibiting lottery circulars passing through the mails. The debate in the Senate on the passage of the bill exhibits the lottery business in its true colors. There seems to have been no difference of opinion as to the immoral character and evil tendency of lotteries. The point about which there was any conflict was whether a discrimination should not be made in favor of those lotteries which are legalized by State laws. Mr. Whyte, of Maryland, and Mr. West, of Louisiana, while denouncing all lotteries, were in favor of limiting the enactment to illegal lotteries—those not authorized by State laws. The bill as passed prohibits all lottery circulars from being sent in the United States mails. From the report of the debate we extract as follows:

Mr. West—I believe that a senator might oppose the proposition now reported from the Committee on Postoffices and Postroads without being classed as in favor of the pernicious system of lotteries that prevails through various States. The simple proposition that we have here for action by the Senate is that if any State chooses to legalize a lottery the United States will not lend the machinery of the postoffice to carry on such a business. If we once adopt that policy and embark upon it, there is no end whatever to the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States over the morals of the people in their State enactments. We have such a law in our State. I must confess that I always was, and still am, opposed to it. I contend, however, that it is not in the power of the Congress of the United States to resist carrying through the mails of any such papers. Where public morals are concerned, according to the first clause of this bill, it is a very different question, because no State legislates for the transmission of obscene publications or immoral publications; but if a State chooses to authorize and legalize a lottery, call it gambling if you please, and gambling it is, that is a matter entirely for the consideration of that State, and it does not offend public morals to that extent that those things do to which the other provisions of the bill apply. I say, for one, that Congress has no right to prevent the carriage through the mail of such matters as are legalized by the States themselves; and on this proposition I shall ask for the yeas and nays. The senator from Maryland has moved to strike out the second section. I want the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. Logan—I disagree with the senator from Maryland and the senator from Louisiana as to the power of Congress in reference to providing what shall pass through the mails. If Congress has a right to prohibit obscene matter passing through the mails, it has a right to prohibit lottery tickets or advertisements for lotteries or any other thing on the same principle. Now, sir, I am in favor of the proposition as suggested by the senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Postoffices and Postroads. Lotteries, call them by what name you please, when legalized are legalized gambling, and they can only be legalized in States that are in favor of gambling; and wherever a community is so demoralized that they are in favor of gambling, they will then legalize lotteries, and not till they are so. I think it not only the right and province but the duty of Congress to prohibit the passing through the mails of anything that advertises a lottery or that pertains to lottery tickets. Of all the swindles that are known in this country, this lottery business is the greatest. The New York lotteries that have been in vogue, and some of which were legalized and some not, were the greatest frauds in this country; and the Baltimore lotteries that the senator from Maryland spoke of are equally such. So of the Louisville lotteries that I know something about——

Mr. Whyte—Allow me to correct the senator. We had no Baltimore lotteries since 1859.

Mr. Maxey—Mr. President, I am a member of the Postoffice Committee. I regard this lottery system as one of the greatest curses that ever was inflicted upon the American people. It fosters and encourages vice; it is ruining many of the poorer portion of the community. In the State in which I live we have a constitutional provision which prohibits lotteries, and yet there are gift enterprises of one kind or another scattered all over that State endeavoring to evade the law and obtain by false and fraudulent means the money of the people.

The Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress the power to "establish postoffices and postroads." That is not for the benefit of one State, but for the benefit of the whole people as one great Federal Union. For the benefit of the whole people these postoffices and postroads are established. Upon logic, if the Congress of the United States has the power to prevent the passage of obscene books, pamphlets and pictures through the mails, in like manner it has the power to prevent any other thing which is immoral in its tendency. If it be true that you can permit a lottery ticket to pass from one postoffice in a State to another in the same State, the inevitable logic of that would permit the obscene book, pamphlet or print to pass from the postoffice of one State to another postoffice in the same State. Hence the whole of it turns on the same general theory that you cannot use this common carrier established by the constitution for the benefit of the whole people for any grossly immoral purpose. We had that question before the committee, as the president of the Senate very well knows, in regard to that very matter.

It may be that I go too far on this subject of lotteries, but I regard them as a perfect curse, and I believe in bringing the strong hand of the law down and stopping them, and I do not believe it is in violation of any constitutional right; because I believe the power which is conferred upon Congress "to establish postoffices and postroads" was designed to make them for the benefit of the whole people of the country.

Mr. Whyte—Norman has ever set his face against the sale of lottery tickets more thoroughly than I have. I was on the very first committee in the Legislature of my State that broke it up. It was a system that had existed for years and years in the State of Maryland; it was supported by some of the very best men in the State of Maryland. The trustees and managers of it were among the very best citizens of Maryland, and they at that time saw no impropriety in the sale of lottery tickets. It was a game of chance conducted upon scientific principles, and when the Senator from Illinois charges that the lotteries, as conducted in Baltimore, were frauds, he does not know what he is talking about—that is all I have to say on that question—because they were conducted by managers, appointed by the State, of the highest character, who controlled the drawings, that were made upon a combination that was perfectly scientific and where there was no cheating whatever. But the game was a game of actual, pure chance; just as at your fairs you put your hand in a "grab-bag," and pay for taking out all that your hand can include within it. It is a system which ought not to be encouraged, because on the top of it has been ingrafted another miserable, vicious system known as the policy system, whereby negroes and poor people all over this land have been swindled by policy dealers, whose swindling transactions are based upon the drawings of the lottery.

I am not defending lotteries here; nothing was further from my thought when I rose in this chamber on the bill. I rose in behalf of the people of States that choose to legalize lotteries—a people who choose to believe that it is not immoral—that it is not degrading—that it is not injurious to public morals to allow lotteries to exist. I rose in behalf of the people of a State that entertained such ideas as those to speak for them and say that Congress ought not to interfere to prevent the paths authorized within the confines of a State sending lottery circulars legally within the State to other postoffices throughout that State. That is all I rose for, in the interest of people within the States, and only in their interest. Personally I have none; my people have no interest in this matter. It is a violation of the law of my State to sell a lottery ticket, or to sell a ticket based upon a lottery known as "policy." It is against our law; men are punished with the severest penalties—a thousand dollars fine and imprisonment in the jail, for selling a lottery ticket or a policy ticket within my State.

Mr. Logan—I merely desire to say in reply to the senator from Maryland and his reference to me about my becoming so moralized, as he calls it, that I am a little surprised at his position. He admits that lotteries are immoral in their tendency and in fact, and that while they existed in Baltimore they were so demoralizing that his State had to pass a statute prohibiting them, and attach a penalty to it, I believe, of $1,000 fine and imprisonment. He admits that his State and that in taking part in the organization of the fundamental law of the State advocated that proposition. Therefore, he admits by his arguments that they are immoral and wrong, and ought to be prohibited; but, inasmuch as they are not prohibited in some places, therefore he desires that those places shall have an opportunity of exercising this immoral course of conduct. That is the argument of the senator from Maryland, immoral in Maryland, but perhaps moral in Louisiana; immoral in Maryland, but moral in Kentucky; immoral in Maryland, but moral in every where else where they exist in accordance with law. Now, I should like to ask the senator—of course this is a proposition that is outside of his present ideas—suppose some State should legalize horse-stealing, would he advocate the sending of circulars through the mails for the purpose of encouraging men to commit horse-theft in the country? That is the argument. Although wrong in one State, if it is legalized in another State, therefore it must be lawful in all the States. That is the argument of the senator from Maryland.

Now, my theory is that if it is immoral in Maryland it is immoral everywhere else; if it is wrong in one place it is wrong in another place. If it strikes the sense of the property community as wrong, it is wrong; and as I said before, I would just as soon authorize circulars to be sent out from a gambling-house in Washington City encouraging people to lose their money in what is called banking in gambling parlance, as for bank or roulette or anything of that kind, as to authorize the sending of circulars encouraging persons to lose their money in a lottery.

Now, let us see whether it is honest or not. He says some of the finest people in Maryland, some of the most enlightened people in Maryland, some people of the highest character in Maryland, were in favor of the lottery. I do not know what you call them, lottery colleges or whatever that may be—lottery schemes. Some of the honest people of Maryland—doubtless he thinks they were honest—were so engaged, he says. I should want to have a great deal of evidence to satisfy me that any man who went into a lottery scheme was an honest man. I may be wrong about it; but when a man tells me that he sells a ticket for $10, and that that ticket only has one chance in a thousand to draw a cent, and that an honest performance, I do not believe it. And I do not see how any honest man will engage in a lottery business. Men may be wealthy and considered as standing very high in society because of their wealth or their position; but, if they make their wealth by lottery schemes they are no better than gamblers, no better than the keepers of gambling houses, and ought to stand no better in the community. When a man tells me that a person engaged in the lottery business is a gentleman, I say to him he is such a gentleman as the gambler is anywhere, and no more. If a man has made a fortune by gambling, his fortune may give him a certain position in society, people may tolerate him because he has a fortune, but it is his money, not the man, that secures recognition, just on the principle that if a man owns a jackass he may vote, and if the jackass dies, he shall not; so that the jackass is respected and the man not. That is all there is of it. And that is the principle on which men who engage in lotteries are considered gentlemen in this country. They are gamblers, extortioners, and men who act in a fraudulent way for the purpose of depriving their fellow-citizens of their money. They ought not to be recognized either by law or by the courtesy of society, nor do I think the gentlemen who defend them have a very nice notion of morality either.

Rev. T. A. Boddie, in charge of the Montgomery circuit, Louisiana Conference, has recently met with a sore bereavement in the death of his son Thomas, a gifted and promising young man, who died suddenly, in his twenty-first year. We pray that the sorrowing family may be divinely supported. An obituary of the deceased will appear soon.

Rev. A. H. Brewer, writing from Wills Point, Texas, August 19, says:

"I have a very interesting meeting in progress near Wills Point. Some twenty to twenty-five converts, the altar crowded with mourners, and the whole country, for eight or ten miles around, is fully aroused. The Lord is with us. Seventeen have been received into the church, and two more will probably join to-day."

Rev. William G. Cocke, writing from Helena, Texas, August 19, says:

"Say to the readers of your estimable ADVOCATE that the Lord has been with us away out here in the West Texas Conference; has converted about one hundred souls on the Helena circuit; some seventy-five having joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Most of the others joined the Baptist; some the Presbyterian."

We have received from the Publishing House at Nashville a copy of the minutes of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for 1875.

Unless I make religion my great and engrossing concern, I shall be a stranger to all solid peace and enjoyment.

INDIANAPOLIS MILL WORKS.—Communicated.—All these works are in full time and turn out all sorts of timber supplies from a entire mill to the smallest of mill furnishings. plans and specifications of mills will always be furnished, description and contract taken for building the entire mill, experienced men. Besides doing a large amount of this work and preparing Messrs. Cammack & Co. delivery yards in Indianapolis and for brand, bolting cloths, their packers, shift and separating machines, water wheels, leather and gum belting, and a general line of mill supplies. Send for price list and catalogue. Parties in the country will find it to their interest to correspond with this reliable firm. Their factory is always very busy. Mr. Cammack has been in the business for many years, and is well known to the trade. He is a thorough mechanic, and his work is guaranteed to give satisfaction. See advertisement.

WE CALL attention to Shaffer's Curative Pad, which will be found a valuable aid in the treatment of rupture. It is highly recommended by those who have used it, and we understand it is meeting with a ready sale. See advertisement in another column.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.—We call the attention of planters to the advertisement of Messrs. Valle & Cuddy, in to-day's paper. These gentlemen have been in the storage and general commission business and have been long engaged in it. The principals are high as composed of cautious and reliable men, and we would cordially recommend them to planters to whom the market consumption, etc. Their office is at 26 Carondelet street.

ELECTRO AND STEREOTYPE FOUNDERY.—Messrs. Odom, Campbell & Co., whose advertisement occurs elsewhere, are now their old facilities, engaged in electrotyping, stereotyping, wood engraving and printing. The latter is executed work from having been engaged in it in the largest houses in the Eastern cities, and employ a number of workmen, and are spoken of in complimentary terms by the trade.

WE DESIRE to call the attention of our friends visiting New York and Boston to the notices of the Grand Hotel, New York, and the American House, Boston. Every convenience can be had at each of these houses, and, being centrally located, they are desirable stopping places. We have before us a private letter from one who has tried them, and the speaks of their courtesies in flattering terms. The charges will be found reasonable.

STEEL PENS.—Few imagine the care and attention required to manufacture good pens. A large number of pens, now in use, are almost worthless, and simply because they are not so made as to spread and form the slit. Among those most notably is that of Joseph Gillott & Sons, whose pens have been the standard for many years, and which are found in the offices of almost every banking house and counting room in the country. The secret of their excellence is that all the processes of manufacture are carried on under the personal supervision of members of the firm, and that the best workmen are employed. Every pen is tested before it is packed for sale, and the result is that a box of Gillott's pens rarely contains a worthless one. Their pens are sold by all dealers, and we would advise our readers to call for them.

STOVES.—We refer our readers to the stove advertisement of G. W. Woodruff, in to-day's issue. Mr. Woodruff has been engaged in this business for many years, and is well posted as to the merits of the different stoves. He is a reliable man, and any of our friends who have dealings with him will find his goods satisfactory. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

MARTIN COLLEGE.—Under the management of our old friend, President R. H. Rivers, will open its fall session on the fourth of September. Dr. Rivers is a finished educator, he has but few equals in the capacity and art of managing schools, and those who wish to send their daughters in a right direction will find that Martin College offers many advantages.

EMORY COLLEGE, OXFORD.—The fall term of this excellent institution commences on Wednesday, September 6. Parents wishing to send their sons to a college where the work of education is thorough and substantial, and where they will be surrounded with noble examples of men who are as near as they are mediocrities, can scarcely do better than to send to Emory.

TEMPERANCE is attracting much attention, showing itself in local option laws, societies, crusades and meetings upon Hygiene principles; but with all these efforts the consumption is enormous and unabated; the reason is because there is nothing strenuously advocated to relieve and destroy the craving for stimulants. Dr. Tate's discovery was treated rationally by arousing the torpid Liver with Simmons' Liver Regulator, the only natural remedy known that will do this. Thousands of the reformed would testify to its value, if necessary. Not with standing the unprincipled, who are engaged in selling vile substitutes, Simmons' Liver Regulator is the only reliable remedy for Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Sick Headache, Colic, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Nausea, Heartburn, Chills and Fever, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Coated Tongue, Pain in the Side, Back and Limbs, and all diseases of the Liver. THE FINEST AND BEST.

CIRCULAR.—To those engaged in mercantile pursuits, any invention that will legislate their Labor, is highly worthy of notice, as well as of extensive patronage. One of the most important inventions of the present age is that of a pen that possesses the necessary qualities of firmness in work and durability in use. The ultimately such, are the GOLD PENS of JOHN FOLEY, manufacturer of Fine GOLD PENS AND PENCILS, No. 2 Astor House. Their superior value is testified by the long time he has been engaged in currently in their manufacture. We, the subscribers, who know the value of FOLEY'S PENS from constant use of them for a number of years, cheerfully recommend them to those who wish for the best and most perfect Gold Pen ever made.

MEDICAL.

A STRING OF PEARLS!

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1872:

I can safely say that my condition requires it. Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator will be a good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies.

Hon. Alex. H. Stephens has greatly improved in health of late. The State Line Press, Boothville, La.

Testimony of the Chief Justice of Georgia.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for constipation of my bowels, caused by a temporary derangement of the liver, for the last three or four years, and always with unqualified success. I have also recommended it to the directions, with decided benefit. I think it is a good medicine for the derangement of the liver at least such has been my personal experience in the use of it. Hon. Warner, Chief Justice in Georgia.

Opinion of the Clergy.

Simmons' Liver Regulator is certainly a specific for that class of complaints which it claims to cure. Many of our fellow-beings are suffering from the pain and disorders and have doubts in relation to the efficiency of this popular preparation; we can only offer them the simple and candid assurance of Philip to Nathaniel: "Come and see." Try the recommended remedy, and then you can judge for yourselves.—Rev. David Wills, Pastor of Presbyterian Church, Macon, Ga.

Always Keep It On Hand.

I have used Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator myself, and in my family, for years, and recommend it as one of the most satisfactory and easy remedies that can be used. Nothing would induce me to be without it, and I recommend all my friends, if they want to be sick, to always keep it on hand.—R. L. Moore, Editor Ga. Christian.

CAUTION!

Buy no Powders or Prepared Simmons Liver Regulator unless in our engraved wrapper, with Trade Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Honey Resources.

Let every bee-keeper prepare a sheet of paper as follows:

Head it with Honey resources; draw four vertical lines on it, thereby making five columns; over the first column write, Name of resource; over the second, Commencement; third, Quality; fourth, Quantity; and over the fifth, Duration. As soon as you find your bees are gathering honey in the spring, ascertain the source and quality of the honey being gathered, and enter them in their respective columns, together with the date of commencement. When they cease gathering from this source, note the quantity, and write the length of time which has elapsed since its commencement, in the column marked "Duration." Continue in the same manner, throughout the entire season, to record each source from which your bees gather honey. The quantity of honey gathered can be very nearly ascertained by weighing the hives each day and noting their weight.

When we judge of the quantity of honey secreted by different varieties of flowers by the quantity which is gathered while each kind is in blossom, we must take into consideration the strength and condition of the colony, as it works upon each variety, for its numbers are liable to vary greatly during the honey season. Much also depends upon the weather.

At the end of the season, in looking over the table in which you noted down the different weights of your hives, you will find there were times of scarcity, during which little honey was gathered; and by referring to the table which we have just described you can readily tell what kinds of flowers were in blossom at this time. This would be a hint for you to cultivate those varieties more extensively another year; or, if they were wild flowers or weeds, which you did not wish to cultivate, let it be a hint for you to ascertain what kinds of field crops or ornamental flowers are in blossom at that time of the year, also for you to cultivate them.

All this may seem considerable trouble, but it will pay.—Bee Journal.

WHEN TO TRANSPLANT EVERGREENS.—There are advocates of three theories, namely: planting in the fall, in early spring, and late spring; and again, others have serious objections to any or all of these plans. One grower says he would not plant any kind of a tree in the fall on heavy soil, as they will be often thrown out by the frost. We transplanted a fine lot of evergreens (Norway spruce) in August, as recommended by a nurseryman, protected them, but they were all dead in spring. We tried planting in early spring, but had the same result. At last we tried the first two weeks of June, and succeeded admirably. We transplanted some Hemlock Spruce in September and the first of October, taking care to mulch the roots of the trees. These, too, have kept well. From our own personal experience, the best time to plant evergreen trees is between the fifteenth of May and fifteenth of June, and for hardy evergreens the month of September or October is good. Mulch the ground well, and be particular to see that the trees are well packed and the roots kept moist and unexposed. Choose a wet, moist day for digging, and also for transplanting. Our own experience in transplanting evergreens has been to plant in the latter part of May and the first two weeks of June. An evergreen should be planted as soon after it is taken from the ground as possible. Do not let the roots get at all dry. When planting pulverize and fix the soil well around the roots. If in an exposed situation, stake the tree.—Horticulturist.

BRINE THAT WILL PRESERVE BUTTER A YEAR.—Among the many devices for keeping butter in a manner that will preserve the fresh, rosy flavor of the new, with all its sweetness, is the following from the Duchess Farmer, which is said to be entirely successful: "To three gallons of brine, strong enough to bear an egg, add a quarter of a pound of fine white sugar, and one tablespoonful of saltpeter. Boil the brine and when it is cold strain carefully. Make your butter into rolls, and wrap each separately in a clean white muslin cloth, tying up with a string. Pack a large jar full, weight the butter down, and pour over the brine until all is submerged. This will keep really good butter perfectly sweet and fresh for a whole year. Be careful to not put upon nice butter that you wish to keep any length of time. In summer, when the heat will not admit of butter being made into rolls, pack closely in small jars, and, using the same brine, allow it to cover the butter to the depth of at least four inches. This excludes the air, and answers very nearly as well as the first method suggested."

PARKER HOUSE ROLLS.—At night take two quarts of flour, rub in two tablespoonfuls of lard, make a hole in the middle, and put in one pint of cold boiled milk and one half cupful good sweet yeast. Three tablespoonfuls of sugar and a little salt. Do not mix as stiff it, but let it stand until morning, then mix it, and beat it hard; let it stand until very light, then roll out, cut in round cakes, spread on a little butter, and fold in half; put in pans and let them stand until light enough to bake. Don't bake too hard.

FLOUR PANCAKES.—Good flour pancakes may be made of this batter, with flour stirred into a proper thickness, a little salt and sufficient soda dissolved in warm water to make it sweet and entirely neutralize the acid. The proportion of soda will vary with the sourness of the milk, and should be carefully adjusted.

Our prayer and God's mercy are like two buckets in a well—while the one ascends the other descends.

OILS, LAMPS, ETC.

ILLUMINATING OILS

AND

FLUIDS!

AT

REDUCED PRICES.

THE

PUROLINE AND PORTABLE

GAS LIGHT CO.

Offer to the trade, at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES, the following list of their superior and popular brands:

INSURANCE OIL.

The Insurance Oil is the best Family Safety Oil, and is urgently recommended by all the Insurance Companies as a substitute for common Coal Oil or Kerosene. It may be used in ordinary lamps Without Change of Burner.

THE NEW ORLEANS BOARD OF UNDERWRITERS SAY:

"It is our opinion that the general use of the Insurance Oil would greatly reduce the number of lamp fires and explosions, and lessen the risk of destruction of life and property."

It will not explode or ignite in a lamp, and the price has been so reduced as to place it within the reach of all classes of consumers, and make it the great FAMILY SAFETY OIL.

As an Illuminating Oil for family use, or for general use in ordinary Kerosene or Coal Oil lamps, the Insurance Oil has the indorsement of the New Orleans Board of Health, the Fire Commissioners, and all the American and European Insurance Agencies, as PERFECTLY SAFE.

Refined Carbon or Coal Oil.

THE WELL-KNOWN CROWN BRAND.—This is a pure, high test coal Kerosene or Coal Oil, generally known as the Crown Oil, and recommended to the trade, and to consumers, who buy CHEAP OILS, as the best and safest OF ALL THE LOW-PRICED ILLUMINATING OILS in market. It has years experience—no accident from its use has ever occurred. The Puroline and Portable Gas Light Company have the exclusive agency of the Crown Oil for the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas.

PUROLINE FLUID.

For Metallic Gas Lamps and Portable Gas Burners. Manufactured and sold only by the Puroline and Portable Gas Light Company and their Agents.

This celebrated Fluid, prepared by a process known only to the proprietors, is the best and most reliable of all the products of Petroleum for use in Metallic Portable Gas Lamps and Lanterns. It burns clear and bright, is free from smoke or disagreeable odor, and does not clog the wick or burner. Neither Coal Oil or Oil should be used in Portable Gas Lamps or Lanterns.

Puroline is especially recommended for use in Portable Gas Lamps and Chandeliers, in Street Lanterns, Sugar-House Lamps, Cane Shed Lanterns, and in Torches and Gas Burners for Steamboat Landings, Mooring Piers and Street Processions. Giving a light, equal to the best city coal gas, it enables the people of the remotest villages to illuminate their Stores, Warehouses, Saloons, Hotels, Churches, Streets and Gardens as brilliantly as the favored residents of a great metropolis.

Gasoline for Gas Machines.

Distilled expressly for the Puroline and Portable Gas Light Company, and with peculiar regard for the changes of temperature so common in this climate. Unequaled for generating gas, or for carbureting coal gas.

Carburetors, painters and owners of Gas Machines cannot overestimate the importance of having their gasoline of reliable gravity and quality, as success depends a great deal upon it. Hence our efforts

...NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the ...discovery of this wonderful compound. Its ...established virtues and its high reputation in ...complaints of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels ...are well known, and has been tested for so many ...years by such extensive patronage, that it would ...be needless, at this late day, to dwell at any ...length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, ...Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, ...Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

...It has been found highly beneficial in all Pulmonary disorders, such as Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, ...Chronic Sore Eyes, Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Consumption which, for want ...of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed ...Consumption.

...All affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most effectious in curing, that most awful scourge whenever it is resorted to.

...Besides its wonderful certainty of cure, this ...extraordinary medicine has over most remedies of the same character the decided advantage ...of being perfectly harmless in its effects, and ...may be administered with the best results to children and infants of particular diet. It is also the cheapest and best cough syrup ever offered to the public, as one bottle will last a family for a long time.

...Every family should keep a supply of this Sirup by them, as from three to five years old may take ...from six teaspoonfuls during the day, in proportion to the ages, at intervals of three to four hours.

THE
BALANCED SCREW
COTTON PRESS.

THIS is the most valuable improvement ever made upon the Screw Cotton Press of Louisiana all their good qualities and adds thereto equality and ease of operation.

The Platform is square, and closely fits the screw. The nuts of a Revolving Screw, with the nut open, the screw and follower are held stationary, the cast Iron Head is turned and the threads of screw in the usual manner. Upon the nut and head the screw is held stationary, and the nut is turned. The screw is constant of Steel and Copper, lasting and keeping the screw in repair. Unlocking the press at least SIX Cubic inches, reducing the time and labor of packing to a minimum.

This Press has taken the premium over all competitors at the recent State Fairs of Mississippi and Louisiana.

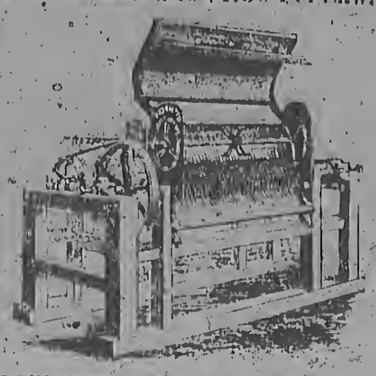
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It eliminates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the pull from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the Same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time while consuming steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very clear, the length of the staple is increased, producing a crop of this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every instance ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

LITTLE WORRIES.

Though many ills may hamper life
When fortune turns capricious,
The great but nerve us for the strife,
The small ones make us victims.
Fierce griefs are soon outstripped by one
Who through existence scurries;
It's harder for a race to run
With nibble "little worries."

A button lets your skirt good-by
When late for dinner dressing;
You have a kite you cannot fly;
A pod creditors are pressing.
You run to catch—and lose—a train.
(That foulest of hurries);
Your newest hat encounters rain—
Life's full of "little worries."

From day to day some silly things
Upset you altogether;
There's naught so soon convulsion brings
As tickling with a feather.
Gainst minor evils let him pray
Who fortune's favor courts—
For one that big misfortunes slay
Feeds off "little worries."

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

MONROE, LA., Aug. 29.—This city and vicinity is greatly excited because of the firing into last night of the residences of David Faulk and Isaiah Garrett, and the attempt to kill Lamy Faulk, planters living on the river below here. Mrs. David Faulk has been dangerously ill for weeks. Her bed-room was the target of the assassins. Mr. Garrett's house received about seventy bullets. Mr. Lamy Faulk saw two men, both colored, enter his gate; they exploded two caps, aiming at him, and went on. Several white families in the vicinity have come to this place for safety, and appeals have been made to the volunteer company here for assistance.

No cause can be imagined for this outrage, which has thrown the whole parish into intense excitement, and spread terror among the white families of this section, where the greatest quiet has hitherto prevailed. It is thought that this trouble is the sequence of a disturbance occurring last Saturday at a Republican barbecue, when eight or ten whites, present by invitation, were rudely treated by the negroes; their lives threatened, and were forced to leave the grounds to pacify the infuriated blacks, who drew repeaters and otherwise exhibited the ferocity of desperadoes.

Fortunately the firing at the house did no serious damage, although the shot in each case entered the bed-room. Steps have been taken to preserve the peace, and prevent a recurrence of similar outrages.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 29.—The block bounded by Brannon, Townsend, Third and Fourth streets burned. Loss $500,000. Two hundred families made homeless. One fireman fell from a ladder and broke his neck.

SARATOGA, Aug. 30.—The convention went into nomination for Governor. The names of Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer, Horatio Seymour, Lucius Robinson, Clarkson N. Potter, and James P. Starbuck were successively proposed, amid much debate and confusion.

Mr. Potter's nomination was supported in an earnest speech by John Kelly. A strong effort was made to dispense with a ballot, and nominate Horatio Seymour by acclamation, although it was stated in the convention that Mr. Seymour had peremptorily declined to permit the use of his name as a candidate, and a telegram from him to Senator Kernan was read, stating that he could not allow the use of his name, because his health would not permit.

A resolution was finally moved and carried that he be nominated by acclamation, and he was so nominated for Governor of New York, amid indescribable enthusiasm.

A committee of ten was appointed to wait upon Mr. Seymour and notify him of his nomination.

WASHINGTON, August 31.—The Turkish minister has received the following dispatch from his government:

Constantinople, Aug. 31.—The cruel disease of which the Sultan Murad Khan has been suffering ever since the tenth day of his accession to the throne, and which aggravation has been continually increasing, having put him in the manifest impossibility to take any more the reins of the Empire, in virtue of the "Fetva" rendered by his highness the Chekh-ul-Islam, and conformably to the laws regulating the exercise of the sovereignty in the Empire, his majesty, the Sultan Hamid, presumptive heir to the Imperial throne, has been proclaimed to-day Emperor of Turkey.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 31.—Official reports from the cemeteries show that there were twelve yellow fever interments yesterday. The report of commissioners of benevolent associations, to-day, shows that the disease is on the decrease, and is confined entirely to the suburbs.

VICKSBURG, Aug. 31.—The cotton worm is giving the planters in this section a good deal of trouble.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 31.—A dispatch from Decatur, Texas, says: The Rev. W. G. England, Methodist minister, his wife, step-daughter, and four step-sons were murdered at their home, six miles from Montague, last Saturday night by a party of disguised men. No particulars of the fiendish affair have been received, but it is supposed the butchery was committed for money, as the family was wealthy.

TALLAHASSE, September 1.—Gov. Stearns, of Florida, has issued a proclamation, establishing a quarantine against Savannah.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—A special to the Post from Utica says: Nothing after Horatio Seymour's determination not to permit the use of his name as the Democratic candidate for Governor. He says this morning that he will listen to no more gentlemen who wish to urge the nomination upon him, no matter who they are. He has been made sick by the interviews and excitement of the last two days.

SAVANNAH, Sept. 2.—The first official report of the fever published to-day shows 250 cases since August 21, and 10 deaths.

SAVANNAH, Sept. 4.—Total interments to-day 17; yellow fever 10.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA, Aug. 29.—A special dispatch from Constantinople to the Political Correspondence says a cabinet council, at which all the grand dignitaries were present, resolved to depose the present Sultan, Murad Effendi, and proclaim Abdul Hamid. The change will occur shortly, certainly before the beginning of the next Ramadan, the great annual feast of the Mohammedans.

BELGRADE, Aug. 31.—Official intelligence received to-night announces that the Turks were defeated at all points on the right bank of the Morava, and subsequently taken in the flank, put to flight, and their bridges over the Morava destroyed. The Servians occupied the Turkish entrenchments on the right bank of the Morava.

ROME, Aug. 31.—The Ex-Empress Eugenie has purchased for her winter residence here the villa of the Grand Duchess Marie, of Russia.

TUSCALOOSA DISTRICT, NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: As secretary I was requested by the Conference to forward the following report for publication in the ADVOCATE:

To the members of the Tuscaloosa District Conference:

Your committee on finance have had the financial interests of the district under due and prayerful consideration, with such data as have been at our command, and beg leave to report.

The assessments for the support of the ministry have been, for the most part, judiciously made, and, while not so great as men of equal talent would expect to receive in secular employments, would, nevertheless, if promptly paid, be sufficient to insure the ministers and families a comfortable living, and free them from that anxious care consequent upon meager supplies. This relief they should by all means have, and thus they could devote themselves, unhampered, exclusively to the ministry of God's word.

We regret to say that of the assessment made for the entire year only about thirty-two per cent. has been raised up to this time, the end of the eighth month. It is unnecessary to say that that amount is wholly inadequate even to a mean livelihood, and that, unless some plan can be adopted to render our financial system more efficient, our organizations, as at present constituted, must suffer rapid decay. The ministry must be supported. To this end your committee would impress upon the board of stewards the solemn responsibility resting on them, in view of the paramount importance of the great work committed to their charge, and would urge on them the necessity of immediate exertion in behalf of our beloved Methodism. We make this appeal to them, with full assurance that, if they will take hold of this work with that zeal and energy due its incalculable importance, the fruits of their efforts will be timely felt; yes gratefully realized throughout the whole district.

We recommend to the stewards the adoption of the method of assessment as approved and commended by our General Conference. It has the sanction of our great and wise men, and, moreover, has given satisfaction on faithful trial.

While we are confident that zealous, continued efforts on the part of the entire board of stewards will go a great way toward remedying the existing evil; yet we would say to our ministers that it is the opinion of your committee that the framers of our system never designed that the whole responsibility of your support should rest on the stewards unaided by yourselves. Your counsel and co-operation are indispensable to their success. We would recommend that you at once make your board of stewards as efficient as possible, by filling it with your most promising members, and that you co-operate with them in the discharge of their duties; and, furthermore, we would suggest that on proper occasions you enlighten your memberships relative to their financial obligations to the church, and impress on them the scriptural doctrine of ministerial support, both by explaining and defending it.

When you shall have fully aroused our congregations to a keen appreciation of duty on this subject our financial embarrassments will measurably abate, and an era of prosperity and brotherly love, such as we have long prayed for, will be the glorious sequel. Respectfully submitted,

A. G. COPELAND,
GEO. C. ALLEN.

JACKSON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Jackson District Conference was held at the town of Edwards, Hinds county, Miss., July 27-29, 1876. The Rev. W. B. Hines, P. E., in the chair. All the charges save one were represented, the pastor of that charge being absent from sickness.

The preachers on the district are full of working men, doing their duty, and are led by an efficient and experienced presiding elder. The usual committees were dispensed with, and each preacher called upon to report the condition of his charge according to the disciplinary regulations, prefacing his report with a brief relation of his present religious experience. Every item of interest was carefully inquired into. The reports show that quite a number have been added to the church; that, while on some of the charges the spiritual state of the church is at a low ebb, on others the prospects are encouraging, and on the whole the preachers are looking and laboring for considerable improvement.

Owing to the stringency of the times the district, so far as a majority of the charges are concerned, is financially behind, attributable in most cases to want of proper system. The preachers seem hopeful for the future, and think all the claims will be fully met before the close of the Conference year.

Prominence was given to religious services. Preaching at eleven A. M. and at eight P. M. was spiritual, and the work attended with power—the interest increasing until the close of the Conference. When the quarterly meeting commenced the meeting was protracted for several days with several conversions and a number of accessions to the church.

The Conference passed the following resolutions:

Whereas, Centenary College, of Jackson, La., is the joint property of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, and a member of this Conference, Rt. C. G. Andrews, D. D., has been for several years and is now the capable and honored president of this once greatly prosperous institution of learning; Therefore, The Mississippi Conference at its last session, by resolution, pledged its efforts to raise a centennial endowment fund to support the college,

Resolved, That this District Conference reaffirms the action of the Annual Conference, and will endeavor to sustain the college in this hour of its great need.

R. D. NORSWORTHY,
JOHN T. CAMERON.

The delegates to the Annual Conference are William L. Nugent, Lorenzo D. Langford, J. E. Coker, and John T. Cameron. Alternates—R. D. Hurdy, William P. Dewes, Henry Bundell, and D. Bunch. Yazoo City was selected as the place of holding the next District Conference.

JOHN T. CAMERON,
Secretary.

HEALING SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.—Mr. Editor: Please permit me to call special attention to the notice of the Healing Springs camp meeting, which appears in the ADVOCATE this week.

The camp ground is in the bounds of the Bladon Springs circuit, Mobile district, Alabama Conference, and is located at Healing Springs, in the northern part of Washington county. We are now improving the grounds and erecting an excellent board shed 70x50, and so constructed as to be enlarged whenever necessary. As to location, a more suitable place could not have been selected for a camp meeting. It is about a central point from Bladon Springs, St. Stephens, State Line, Buckatunna, Waynesboro, and Isney, and backed by a country abounding in fat beeves, mutton, kids, chickens, eggs, corn, etc.

The water is abundant, and said to be the very best quality of mineral. We want no better evidence of its healing properties than that it cures the afflicted. This fact cannot be questioned while there are so many living witnesses. To my own certain knowledge, Mr. Editor, some very remarkable cures have been effected by it. I have seen visitors there, talked with them, and heard their own testimony. Some of them afflicted with diseases of long standing have been restored to health in a single month. The proprietor, Mr. W. H. Wooten, is himself a living monument of the virtue of the water. Eminent physicians had exhausted their skill and pronounced his disease incurable, but by the use of this water in a short time he was entirely relieved. The scars are still upon him, but he enjoys perfect health. These springs are a new discovery, and are rapidly coming into notice. As yet they are not well improved. Most of the buildings are only log cabins. Doubtless in a few years this will be one of the most popular watering-places in the South. The proprietor has kindly donated the land for the camp ground, and gives the free use of the water to all who attend. This affords a good opportunity to those seeking health. Many are not able to come and board, but they can erect tents and remain as long as they choose. Contractors are there ready to build tents at low prices.

Mr. Editor, we hope to see you and the publisher of the ADVOCATE both on the ground, and if any of your city preachers wish to enjoy a visit to the springs, this is a rare opportunity. Ministers all invited. We will bring them from Buckatunna station, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, free of charge, and take care of them as long as they will stay.

Very truly, W. H. WOO.

CASTOR SPRINGS, ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—The Camp Meeting etc.—Mr. Editor: Castor Springs are about fifty-five miles—the nearest way you can go on horseback—from Alexandria. They are about twenty miles, I think, from Columbia, on the Ouachita river. Going from Alexandria there, if you do not want to be oppressed with the solitude of the route, you had better take your company with you. Three of us together managed to endure the long, weary distances between houses, with nothing to relieve the monotony of the open pine woods but occasional creeks with their swampy bottoms.

It was a relief, after a day and a half's ride through such a dreary country, to come upon such a spot as the Castor Springs, with the large and well-furnished hotel and surrounding cottages there. These springs are the property of Bro. T. J. Hough, formerly an enterprising lawyer of Columbia, but who has recently given up his law for the ministry. He incurred large expense improving this site on account of the medicinal value of the water. The principal property is sulphur, but there are several others very valuable. Numbers of persons have been greatly benefited in health at these springs. Now, the question arises here: why do not our people patronize these summer watering-places at home? I cannot see how the air is any better in Virginia than in these high pine forests, and I cannot believe the water is any better.

The District Conference convened, and went through its business pleasantly. We had fair representation of preachers and laymen. I believe all felt that the Conference session was itself profitable. The Conference business was over with Friday, and then all our energies were devoted to the camp meeting exercises. The religious exercises were engaged in with great fervor. Many Christians were made happy, and there seemed a good influence exerted upon nearly all present. The conversions up to Sunday night, I think, numbered nearly thirty. A considerable number united with the church. Many thanks are due Bro. Hough for his liberality in providing for the comfort of our delegates and for the success of the camp meeting.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., August 16, 1876.

RANDOLPH CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We commenced a protracted meeting at Randolph station, on the S. R. and D. railroad, on Saturday before the fifth Sunday in July, which was continued eight days. The interest was good, and increased from the beginning to the end of the meeting, resulting in the conversion of ten persons, and eight accessions to the church.

We were disappointed at not receiving ministerial help from our beloved Bro. Shores, on account of sudden illness in his family, yet God abundantly owned and crowned our feeble efforts, and we believe a permanent work is done at this place which will result in the building up of the church. A weekly prayer meeting has been established, in which the young members take an active part.

The outlook upon this circuit is very encouraging at the present. The farmers are blessed with good crops, and prosperity seems to be dawning upon the land.

Yours in Christ,

R. A. MEAKS.

AUGUST 19, 1876.

From Tennessee.

MR. EDITOR: A welcome weekly visitor in the shape of the ADVOCATE has just arrived in the home of an itinerant preacher. But although there are other homes in Tennessee that are gladdened by its presence, yet we know that it is not circulated as widely as it deserves, for it should be in the families of all who profess Methodism. Now that the revival season is at hand, every faithful laborer in the vineyard needs the encouragement, the help, and the information that is found in the ADVOCATE; it matters not how many other papers he may take.

On Tuesday last we attended the closing exercises of the Beaver-dam camp meeting, held on the Camden circuit, in Benton county. Bro. Smith, Bro. Ayers, and Bro. Nelson, P. C., were the only preachers present, several others having left for other fields of labor, among them our beloved presiding elder, J. H. Witt. He worked faithfully and as long as he could with them. On the Sunday previous he preached on "Infant Baptism" with all of the clearness and power of an eloquent mind illumined with undefiled religion. There are many Methodists to-day who do not believe in this important ordinance, merely because it has never been explained to them and they do not understand it. Truly we are blessed in having such a worthy presiding elder. His sermons abound in moral loveliness and spiritual beauty, always lifting the minds of his hearers into a contemplation of all that is pure, holy, and exalted. Rev. Robert Ayres preached at eleven o'clock on Tuesday morning. His discourse was full of the Holy Ghost, and his language was at once tender, yet impassioned, graceful, yet profound. Rev. R. Nelson conducted the exercises in the evening. He is a man of sterling worth and active zeal, discharging his duties as a minister regardless of opposition. The services closed the next morning, which was the fortieth anniversary of the Beaver-dam camp meeting. Among those who joined the church was Bro. Nelson's baby boy, Sanninie, just ten years old. The dear child seemed to be filled with religion, and when his mother took him in her arms every one shed tears. The number of converts was between eighty and a hundred. We are praying for a revival all over the district, and our presiding elder is devoting all of his time, talents, and energies to forward the cause.

VERSE-MAKING.—We did think that writing poetry was, and could not be otherwise, worse than a waste of time, but it appears by the following from the Spectator that there is, after all, something to be said in its favor: "In the 'Rules of Rhyme,' an excellent little hand book to verse-making, written half a dozen years ago by the younger Tom Hood, we find a suggestion to which we may refer as bearing somewhat on the subject of our remarks upon 'Feminine Poetry,' in No. 556. Mr. Hood advised the general instruction of the young in the art of making verses, as a means of escaping the ever-swelling tide of 'poetry' written by those who can truly echo the hero of Mr. Browning's, 'One Word More' in saying, 'Verse, and nothing else, have I to give you.' It would seem at first as though this treatment would aggravate rather than reduce the disease. Mr. Hood did not think so. In the note to page 11 he says: 'There is one decided advantage to the public which would accrue from the teaching of versification in schools. We should be saved the infliction of much nonsense published under the name of poetry; for it is to be hoped that no man who had been well grounded in the mechanism of verse as a lad would think of publishing in mature age what he would know were but school exercises only and not poems.' Not only would the practice of verse-making have the negative merit here claimed, but it would also positively do good from its tendency to correct inaccurate pronunciation."

Stuart Robinson, the actor, is said to have a habit of biting his finger nails. He also has a small daughter. The other day the child deliberately pared her finger-nails, and in the innocence of her heart brought them to her father and said: "Papa, here are some finger-nails for you to eat."

EXPERIMENTS WITH TOADS.—Dr. Buckland, to test the matter in some degree, made remarkable experiments. He caused twelve circular cells or cavities to be cut in a large block of coarse oolitic limestone, with provision for an air-tight glass cover to each cell. Twelve other cells were cut in a block of silicious sandstone. Twenty-four live toads were put into the cells, one in each, the covers fastened down air-tight, and the blocks of stone buried three feet deep in a garden. They were left undisturbed for twelve months, at the end of which time the cells were opened. All the toads in the sandstone rock were dead; but most of those in the oolite (the cells of which were larger) were still living; some had lessened in weight, some had increased; but, as a few of the plates of glass were found cracked, it was deemed possible that minute insects might have entered. The living toads were left alone for another twelve months, at the end of which time all were dead. Seen through the glass, covers, the poor fellows seemed to be always awake, with open eyes. Perhaps they were marvelling what crime of theirs had subjected them to a sentence of two years' solitary confinement. A smaller experiment accompanied this principal one. Dr. Buckland placed four toads in three cells or holes, cut for the purpose, in the trunk of an apple tree. Two were companions in the largest cell, the other two occupied a small cell each; but though small, these cells were tolerably roomy for middle-size toads, being about five inches deep by three inches diameter. The cavities were carefully and closely plugged with wood. All four toads were found dead and decayed at the end of the first year. In another subsidiary experiment, four small basins of plaster of Paris were scooped out, a live toad placed in each, and a cover luted down, air-tight on the top. The whole were buried underground. Twelve months afterward two of the toads were dead, the other two living, but greatly emaciated. To sum up: the best naturalists now agree that, however wonderful the ascertained phenomena really are, frogs and toads cannot live one year wholly without air, nor probably two years wholly without food.—All the Year Round.

A PARABLE.—I held in my hand a little dry tree, an infant hemlock. Had it lived a century it might have towered up above all the forest, and held up its head in majesty. But it grew on a sort of bog, and a muskrat, digging his hole under it, bit off its roots, and it was dead. It was full of limbs and knots and gnarls, and I felt curious to know how it happened that it was so.

"Poor fellow! if you had all these limbs and knots to support, I don't wonder you died."

"And with my roots, which were my mouths with which to feed, all cut off too."

"Yes, but where do all these ugly limbs come from?" said I.

"Just where all ugly things come from," said he. "I am pretty much like you men. Find out where my limbs come from, and you will find where all human sins come from."

"I'll take your at your word, sir."

So I took out my knife and pealed off all the bark. But the limbs and the knots were left.

"You must go deeper than that, sir."

So I began to split off layer of wood after layer. But all the knots were there.

"Deeper still!" said the dry stick.

Then I split it all off, and, separating it, the heart was laid bare; it looked like a small rod about six feet long, and perhaps an inch through at the large ends. Ah! and I was now surprised to see that every limb and knot and gnarl started in the heart. Every one was there, and every one grew out of the heart. The germ or the starting point of each one was the center of the heart.

A wealthy shoemaker of Bremen has had executed life-size statues of the three most celebrated shoemakers in German history. The first of these was the holy St. Crispin, the patron of the shoemakers' craft, the second was brave Hans von Segan, who, in 1370, turned the tide of the great battle of the Germans orders against the heathen Lithuanians by bearing the Imperial standard into the midst of the enemy, and the third was Hans Sachs, the shoemaker bard.

Thackeray, on sitting down to one of Delmonico's spreads, exclaimed: "Now, boys, don't let us say a word."

JUNTA CRUCEM.

From the cross the blood is falling
And to us a voice is calling,
Like a trumpet silver clear;
'Tis the voice announcing pardon,
It is finished! is its burden.
Pardon to the far and near.

Peace that precious blood is sealing,
All our wounds forever healing,
And removing every load;
Words of peace that voice has spoken,
Peace that shall no more be broken,
Peace between the soul and God.

Love, its fulness there unfolding:
Stand we here in joy beholding,
To the exiled sons of men
Love, the gladness past all naming
Of an open heaven proclaiming,
Love, that bids us come in.

God is love! we read the writing
Traced so deeply in the smiting
Of the glorious Sufety there;
God is light! we see it beaming
Like a peaceful day-spring gleaming,
So divine, so sweet and fair.

Cross of shame, yet tree of glory,
Round thee winds the one great story
Of this ever changing earth.
Center of the true and holy,
Grave of human sin and folly,
Womb of nature's second birth.

Dr. Renfroe vs. Facts.

MR. EDITOR: As Dr. Renfroe has had a run of twenty years without being "called in question," he is dying very hard. But as I have taken my pen to him, and as my "prelatical coat" is now in shreds, I reckon I had as well finish the job, and be done with it, and thereby save the "coat" of some other "embryo bishop." If I had known at the outset, what I have learned by experience, I might have saved my "coat," as well as my paper and ink. But the doctor's lament that "nobody would call in question his position" excited my sympathy, seeing that "a controversy all over the State would make the endowment of the Howard College a grand success."

Judging from his effort to answer my last article, he evidently is laboring under the hallucination that success with him depends upon his having "the last lick." My object in writing again is to show his recklessness as a writer. In his last squib of July 27 the doctor asserts boldly that "he [Boland] began this affair." He makes this assertion right in the face of two articles which he had written before I took my pen to him. He makes this assertion, too, knowing that everybody who had read the discussion knew that he had made the attack upon "Methodist records," and then invited me to the contest by publishing my name before my first article appeared. Now how can a man who respects the rules of debate stoop to meet such recklessness as that? "Parson Brownlow" has a vocabulary that would be equal to it, but I beg to be excused.

Having shown in my last article that the doctor had misrepresented Mr. Wesley on the "American war," in failing to give enough of what Mr. Wesley said to show his true position, he now tries to set aside a plain fact—a fact that stood in the very face of Mr. Wesley's language as quoted by him—by raising up a quotation here and there from Mr. Wesley, and thereby makes Mr. Wesley contradict himself in his "calm address," and in his "letter to Lord North and Lord Dartmouth." And then refers the reader, for these quotations, to the Evening Post and "Wesley's works." That is very definite indeed. If he really knows how many volumes compose Wesley's works, why did he not give the volume and page?

As "Mr. Wesley's works" failed to sustain the doctor's charge against "Methodist records," he turns to defend the character of Alex. McCaine! And in the face of all the published facts, as well as the facts known to living witnesses in Talladega, the Rev. J. J. D. Renfroe, D. D., asserts that "Mr. McCaine was a fair and gifted polemic writer," "and died without a spot on his good name." But feeling the weakness of his cause, the doctor brings forward the testimony of two or three of Mr. McCaine's allies, all of whom were crushed in "Dr. Emory's Defense of our Fathers against Alex. McCaine and Others."

No wonder the doctor fights so hard over McCaine's magazine of falsehoods and slander; because, if this be taken from him, his vocation as a peddler of second-handed slander will be gone. True, McCaine was a master in his line, and we are not surprised at the doctor's admiration of his "gifted" powers; but if the Rev. J. J. D. Renfroe, D. D., has entered into a copartnership with McCaine & Co. to peddle out their ready-made slander against Methodism, it is high time for the doctor to quit whining about his "kindly relations with Methodists being broken up by Mr. Boland." McCaine & Co. were open, avowed enemies of Episcopal Methodism, and knew nothing of the doctor's "much-about" way of "running with the hounds and holding with the hare."

After reading the doctor's squib of July 27 we wondered if that was all. When we saw how noiselessly and harmlessly his old exploded "shells" fell, we could but believe that he would "pick his flint and try again;" for as I am the first Methodist minister who has presumed so far (on public opinion) as to notice him since Rev. W. H. McDaniel refused to debate with him twenty years ago, he is determined to enjoy the notoriety, and "quit when he gets ready."

So, sure enough, in the Alabama Baptist of August 3 we find a supplement to his last article. Now, in this "strong and valuable paper," as the chief editor styles it, the doctor reaches his climax of recklessness as an examiner of records. It seems that he had found, or some of the brethren had furnished him, a copy of the "Life and Times of Rev. Jesse Lee, by Dr. L. M. Lee," in which some statements of facts are made in reference to the difficulties Mr. Asbury and six other English divines met with in their missionary work in the colonies during the perilous times of the American war. From page 72 to 75 of this book the doctor gets up a quotation, or quotations, nearly three sticks long, in which we learn that all these missionaries, except Asbury, returned to England—their home and native land. And in reference to Asbury, we learn that during 1778 and 1779 he "had reasonably to suspend his ministerial labors, and spent nearly two years in comparative silence and retirement," etc. Then the doctor asserts that "every fact recorded by Mr. McCaine is supported by Dr. Lee." Now if he intended this assertion to mean that Dr. Lee supported the quotation which he made from McCaine in his article of July 6, then the recklessness of this assertion is an outrage upon the reading public, as may be seen by comparing the two quotations. But if the doctor intended to be understood as saying that "every fact only recorded by McCaine is supported by Dr. Lee," then that is another question. The charge against McCaine has always been that he took the "facts" in Mr. Asbury's life, and so contorted them and added to them as to make a book of falsehoods. Dr. Lee recorded such "facts" as no Methodist has ever denied—such as: "Mr. Asbury, from conscientious scruples, or from the nature of the oath of allegiance in Maryland, sought refuge in Delaware, and found in the hospitable family of Mr. T. White the privacy and comfort his personal safety or spiritual interests required." Unlike some other divines we "wot of," Mr. Asbury had nothing to do with politics—he was in the colonies when the war began, as a missionary, and not as a politician. Such are the "facts" recorded by Dr. Lee and in Mr. Asbury's journal. And out of these "facts" McCaine's "gifted" pen manufactured his book of falsehoods, such as: "Mr. Asbury was a notorious Tory—hid away from the indignities of an outraged people—the colonies;" "Mr. Asbury was obliged to lie concealed in Mr. White's, in the State of Delaware;" and "held Tory Conferences in Delaware while concealed at Mr. White's," etc. As Dr. Emory so clearly shows, "it was thus Mr. McCaine took facts, and from facts fabricated wholesale slander!" And thus the Rev. J. J. D. Renfroe, D. D., adds and says and write just what he pleases. He must not be held down by the rules of debate, but allowed to make his own charges, to select and make his own authorities, begin the attack, and then "quit when he gets ready." He can decry "infant baptism at Ebenezer and scores of other places in Alabama;" he can tell three millions of Methodists that they "have a record that will not do for exhibition;" but the "Methodists must lie low and keep dark." Now if this is the kind of civil and religious liberty the doctor's church has established in this land, then I am free to confess that Methodism has had no part nor lot in it. The exalted privilege and position of Methodism is: "Live and let live." The position of Dr. Renfroe is: "There is but one church on earth, and that church is my church." And this is the great centennial agent of the only true church of Christ on earth, going all over Alabama prating about "religious liberty!" There is religious liberty ad nauseam!

Before any other minister comes down to notice Rev. J. J. D. Renfroe, D. D., in the field of polemics, I would advise him to correspond with Rev. W. H. McDaniel, of the Alabama Conference. It might save his "prelatical coat" from public criticism, if nothing more.

J. M. BOLAND.

P. S.—In the Alabama Baptist of August 3 Deacon Wright and Bro. Sims come to the rescue. Well, the doctor needs help—badly. The deacon "rises to explain" about that "prayer of Mr. Gillis," which he reported to the doctor. But, alas! for Dr. Renfroe, the deacon "admits that in Bro. Renfroe's first article, in his quotations from my letter, there appeared a mistake!" that is very strange, which "mistake" the deacon says "he corrected;" but Dr. Renfroe has never alluded to it in any way that I have seen, but charged me with having "indorsed it."

Bro. Sims tries to help the doctor out with his question of veracity between us. The point of veracity which the doctor raised was that I said "he had made an attack on Methodism in the pulpit," and he denied it. Whereupon I gave his "attack on infant baptism at Ebenezer" as proof; and Bro. Sims states that the doctor did lay in "infant baptism in his centennial address at Ebenezer," and the doctor has said that he "did the same at scores of other places in Alabama."

No wonder the testimony of Bros. Sims and Wright was left out of a large number of the Alabama Baptist distributed among Methodists a few days ago. It was not quite what the doctor wanted.

The Grangers and Whisky.

MR. EDITOR: Some months ago the following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the California Lower Lake Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, No. 77:

Resolved, That Lower Lake Grange, No. 77, is in deep sympathy and hearty co-operation with the Good Templars and others in this State in their endeavors to abolish that class of middlemen known as the retail liquor dealers.

Resolved, That we recommend that our sister granges take such action as will speedily dispense with said middlemen.

I have understood that temperance is one of the elementary principles of the grange movement. If so, the above action is in entire harmony with the spirit of their grand organization, and commends itself to the well wishes and earnest co-operation of the whole people. No class of "middlemen" work a tithe of the injury to the industrial interests and producing classes of our country as the liquor dealers. No monopolists filch the hard earnings of the laborer or prey with gluttony upon legitimate commerce as do the vandal horde of whisky sellers. While, then, it is the fundamental idea of the grangers to husband our industrial resources, and protect producers from the exorbitance and oppression of middlemen, the first effort at relief should be directed against their most inveterate and insatiate foe. In Mississippi intoxicating liquor has stopped more plows and thrown out more unfurrowed field, to sage grass and wild briars than all the devastation of the late bloody war. Thousands of acres, which should now wave with rich and abundant harvests, remain untilled, because time and money thus needed are squandered in dissipation and riot. But lest these assertions be considered rash and fanatic let us appeal for testimony to well-authenticated and credited statistics:

The retail sale of intoxicating beverages in this country is	$700,000,000
It burdens the republic with seventy paupers and children at an annual cost of	70,000,000
The cost of crime from intemperance is	100,000,000
The waste of grain, fruit, etc.	50,000,000
The support of insane, idiots, and disabled-costs	10,000,000
The loss of productive industry from tipplers and drunkards is	200,000,000
Wages and time of manufacturers, dealers, and employes in the traffic	300,000,000
Wasting our country's resources annually	150,000,000

Now after reading the above figures I ask candidly the grangers of our Southern States what is it that most effectually paralyzes our agricultural and commercial prosperity? The answer comes up from every hamlet and home, "liquor and the liquor traffic." If our productive industry needs protection from jobbers being enriched on their poverty, whisky and whisky sellers should first feel the influence of this powerful organization. While they feed like vultures on the life blood of agriculture and commerce, they give in return only beggary, bankruptcy, and widespread ruin.

Liquor traffickers would make us believe they are necessary to the safety and security of our public revenue. Now I ask: who really pay the tax assessed whisky and whisky men? Most assuredly the producing classes. They bear the burden without the credit. They are groaning under this dreadful incubus, and those specially organized for their protection, it does seem, should speak out boldly and with no uncertain sound against their most deadly and unrelenting enemy. The money thus annually robbed from the people of our Southern country would cultivate every bleak and barren field now untouched by the husbandman's plow—a taxable burden to their owners—and cause them to blossom as the rose. The California Grange has sounded the high blast, which, we hope, will be caught up by sister granges, until the whole country engirdled by this organization shall resound with the roar of eternal war against rum and the rum power.

PRAYER.

A friend sends us the following, with a note informing us that it was written by Rev. Dr. William Winans, to his daughter's album on the occasion of her leaving home, and that it was copied from the album thirty-five years ago.—EDITOR ADVOCATE.

Mary, farewell; a father's ardent prayer
Ascends, though halting, to the throne of Heaven,
And supplicates for thee such benefits
As God alone can give, as frail mankind
Must have, or die; must thrive, or die forever.
Wealth he asks not, though wealth well used is good
For man, and may be so applied as well
To honor God, and benefit mankind.
Nor would he ask that fame should sound thy name
With trumpet-clangor to a listening world;
And yet, the approbation of the wise
Is object worthy of no small regard
To social beings, formed to give and take
Each of the other. This approving voice
When wide diffused is fame, and rightly won,
May without censure be enjoyed by man.
Yet not for this thy father Heaven entreats,
Much less for pleasure's various stores he reads,
Where fancy revels, and where appetite
Expatiates at will. These sink the soul
Below her proper mark, and chain her down
In ignominious bondage to the earth,
While she should soar on angel pinions strong
Above the skies, and range with freedom there.
Nor does he ask the wealth of gifted mind,
So lustily prized above all earthly treasure;
This might enable thee to span the heavens,
And calculate the orbits that form this globe—
To class and name the various tribes of life
That people earth and sea and air; to tell
Their nature, habits, instincts, appetites—
To analyze the air, untwist the light,
Make solid substances like fluids turn,
Dissolve admixtures by nature joined,
And drag the lightning harmless to thy feet;
To trace the operations of the mind,
From apprehension, through ideas to acts,
To acts of high and godlike reasoning—
To mark those fruitful passions, love and hate,
Sorrow and joy, with all their progeny
As each prevails, promiscuous to act or feel—
To know the laws, the springs of men,
Their social actions, character, and fate;
All this, and more, can mighty mind achieve,
But yet that mind be seat of sin and woe.
The gift thy father for thee asks is grace,
Grace that will teach thy heart to fear the Lord divine,
To trust his mercy, love his word and ways,
To shun the crooked paths of vice, though strewn
With fragrant flowers that charm the unlettered sense;
To seek thy pleasure only in his smiles—
To follow him though scorn be heaped on thee
By a misjudging world, and true to him
Abide till death transfer thee to that bliss
Complete with lightening and without an end.

Rev. James Long.

The fragrance of a holy life—how it lingers, refreshing and wholesome, when the good man is gone to his rest.

While visiting, recently, the Ellisville mission, which embraces most of Jones county, Miss., I spent a day and night in the vicinity where Bro. James Long died some six months ago. He was a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference. It was delightful to hear the affectionate accounts that one and another of his neighbors would give of his pure character and godly life. For many years he was very infirm. Months before his death he was confined to his bed. Through all this period of suffering he preserved a cheerful, joyous spirit. He was full of kindness to his fellows and zeal for the cause of God. His faith in Christ was implicit. To the last he was resigned, trustful, and happy, living to talk on the Scriptures, and sometimes shouting with joy. His little animal share of the Conference fund was grateful to his feelings, betokening to his loving spirit the regards of the brethren from whom, by his locality, he was almost isolated. It was useful also in procuring him needed material comforts.

More than forty years James Long was a minister of the gospel. In the days of his strength he was laborious and successful as a Protestant Methodist preacher. One year he traveled a circuit on which he received two dollars and a half.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

MEMPHIS, MISS., Aug. 21, 1876.

The largest telescope ever yet attempted is now in course of construction in Dublin, by Mr. Grubb. It is intended for the new observatory of Vienna. The object-glass will have an aperture of over twenty-six inches, and the focal length is to be about thirty-two feet.

What I am to be hereafter I must be becoming now. For day by day I am growing fixedly into the attitude which I bear my sorrows in, and from under them my look heavenward, whatever it is, is becoming eternal with me.—Mountford.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, in Athanta, Winn parish, La., August 3, 1876, of congestive fever, THOMAS T. BOGGLE, son of Rev. D. A. Boddie, the preacher in charge of the Montgomery circuit, and Hepsey P. Boddie. He was born in Chambers county, Ala., on the sixteenth day of May, 1856, and was consequently in the twenty-first year of his age—just blooming into what promised to be a useful manhood. He was a sincere and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, also an officer in the temperance organization at this place. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and his sudden death has cast a gloom over a large circle of friends and acquaintances. His attack was an exceedingly malignant one. Though unwell on Sunday and Monday, he was not seriously affected until Tuesday about midday. His physician reached him in the evening, but, alas! the seal of the Destroyer had been set, and all efforts for reaction proved futile, and in an unconscious state he continued to gradually sink until death relieved his sufferings on Thursday, about twelve o'clock.

Though, in the practice of our profession, we are often called upon to watch the fleeting breath at which with more than ordinary regret in this case, for he was our friend. Join was endeared to us by the nearest ties of friendship. Amid life's ever changing, bustling scenes we shall fail to recognize his frank and manly bearing, yet the remembrance of his virtues will long linger, like the odor of sweet dead flowers, amid the folded leaves of our memory's pages. True as the needle to the pole to his attachments, he had placed his standard of manliness high, and endeavored to conform his acts and life to that high standard. He was an honor to his country and the source of pride to his family. The sympathy of friends is with the bereaved family in this dispensation of God's wonderful and all-wise providence, yet in them God has mingled many sweets with this sore, bitter affliction, for he was a credit to that Christian nurture they have expended in his bringing up, and they mourn not as those who have no hope.

His physician.

THE subject of this notice, Bro. JOSEPH G. MOORE, was born in Oglethorpe county, Ga., in the year 1818, and when a young man removed to Mississippi.

At an early age he connected himself with the Methodist Church, of which he was ever afterward a consistent and active member. For several years he resided in Columbus, Miss., where as a member and steward of the church he stood high, both in Christian conduct and in zealousness in the cause of religion.

After the late war he held an official position in Macon, Noxubia county, where all his actions were characterized by that strict sense of right and that stern integrity which was the law of his life. There it was my good fortune to enjoy his companionship, and that friendship was formed which was only severed by death.

In 1873 he was appointed Consul to Trinidad de Cuba, where he resided until his death from yellow fever, which occurred on the twenty-fourth of July, 1876.

All who were associated with him in his official position bear testimony to the fidelity with which he discharged his duties. As a kind and loving husband, an affectionate parent, and a warm and steadfast friend he had few equals and no superiors.

It was my painful pleasure to hear read a letter from him to his family, written one week before his death. The latter had left him only a few months previous. While longing to be with his loved ones, from whom only a strict sense of duty kept him, he looked upon this separation as intended by his Maker to make him purer, and to cause him to cling still closer to the cross. A more beautiful, touching, and Christian-like letter I have never read.

Few can realize the utter loneliness that must have been his—a stranger in a foreign land, with all his loved ones so far away. Though kind friends attended him to his last illness, yet how sad this to die, with no wife's tender hand to soothe his fevered brow, no loving children to minister to his wants. Terrible and tearful was the blow to his family, but the Guide of the widow and the fatherless does not leave them utterly comfortless. He gives them the blessed consolation and priceless knowledge that their loved one is now with the blessed, awaiting that happy reunion with them from which there will be no more separation.

MAGEE, MISS., August 16, 1876.

MRS. EMMA MCDOWELL was born in Edgefield district, S. C., June 15, 1837; moved to Alabama when quite small, and was educated in Eufaula. She was the eldest daughter of the good old man, Mr. A. J. Wilson, and of Mrs. H. E. Wilson. She was married to Dr. J. T. McDowell, near Woodville, Ga., September 29, 1863, and died of consumption at their residence, in Douglas, Ga., July 7, 1876, at half-past ten A. M. She was a member of the Methodist Church, holding her membership at Wesley chapel.

Two nights before she died her husband, being convinced that she was on the close confines of dissolution, aroused her, and asked if she would like to talk to the children. She replied: "Husband, do you think I will die soon?" He told her she was able to talk then, but if she wished longer she would become so weak that she would not feel like talking. She said: "Why, I thought I was much better. I have rested well to-night," and then continued: "I am not going to get excited, for the Lord has pardoned my sins."

She then made certain requests of her husband, advised him what course to pursue, and had the six little children waked up, blessed them one by one, spoke of their peculiar characteristics, and then gave directions regarding her burial apparel. Her husband informs me that she did not shed a tear, nor did her voice change during the conversation.

I did not reach her bedside until the evening of the sixth. She was sinking rapidly, but called my name many times, expressing her affection for me, and her delight at meeting me with her. Perhaps an hour after, as I stood at her head fanning her, she raised both hands, caught the fan and asked: "Is this Mrs. Colbert's fan?" and as she heard a vehicle pass or the gate close she inquired who had come, and seemed anxious for the arrival of her sister. About five o'clock she called me again, and as soon as her eyes rested on me she began: "Mrs. Colbert, I am so happy—I'm so happy, Mrs. Colbert—I am happy!" Her voice grew stronger and louder as she repeated the glad tidings to her family and many friends around her bed. When I at last replied to her that I was glad she did feel so happy, that I believed it was a happiness that would last her throughout all eternity, she said: "Yes, that is why my soul is now a happy spirit in heaven." In that moment she had conquered death, earth was gone, heaven gained. Trials, perplexities, pains, and achings were at last—lost.

Late in the night she seemed to have a distinct recollection of her excessive spiritual joy during the evening past, for she remarked of a lady friend who had been there, that she was gone when she was so happy. Twice I heard her commending herself, soul and body, to God's mercy. Her affections for those last hours seemed more tender than ever, but there was no clinging to earth.

Mrs. McDowell was never a very demonstrative woman, but she was sincere, and in health she was a most superior hostess—seemed to give her rare delight to entertain her friends. She rests at last, upon the "shining shore," with the redeemed of earth, for her companions, but do not her eyes watch over all nature, and will not the devoted wife and mother be a guardian angel to her loved ones? Yes, as the little daughters remember her daily ministrations of love, her cautious admonitions, her sacred will, with her dying works, be whispered words of wisdom which will be as lamps to their young feet, and as priceless gems in their pure hearts. Their mother's dying wishes, though she be dead, will make them as mothers to the little brothers and sister, and when they are grown to be the pure Christian women that their mother was, have wished to see them [illegible] down the years of their motherless childhood, and shed tears of joy, rather than of sorrow, because they will have [illegible]

LAURAT COLBERT.

AT a called meeting of Starr Council of the Benevolent Degree of Fellowship, Friends of Temperance, Ascension parish, La., a committee was appointed to draw suitable resolutions in regard to the death of Bro. Thomas T. Boggle. The following resolutions were submitted and unanimously adopted:

Thomas T. Boddie, son of Rev. D. A. and Hepsey P. Boddie, was born in Chambers county, Ala., May 16, 1856. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, September, 1873, was initiated into the Benevolent degree Council October [illegible] elled in full fellowship August 5, 1[illegible]

We claim for our brother kindness, sobriety and temperance, [illegible] field and a pure heart. He was an obedient son, a kind brother, a true friend and a devoted Christian, and he died in the hope of the Christian's final reward. We shall keep fresh in our memory the good example he has left and follow in the steps he has trod. For which purpose we offer the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in the dispensation of his providence to remove from himself our worthy chaplain and brother, Thomas T. Boddie; therefore,

Resolved, That in his death Starr Council has lost one of its most useful members, the community a valued citizen, and the cause of Christ a strong support.

Resolved, That while we mourn his loss and miss his counsel and association we bow with resignation to the will of him that doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we cherish his memory and commend to the emulation of the council the many virtues that adorned his short but useful life.

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathies, praying upon them the guidance and protection of him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be furnished to the afflicted family, and that copies be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Edgefield Advertiser for publication. Fraternally submitted.

JAMES HALL,
SAMUEL M. BOAG,
NAT. L. BRAGG.

WILY JONES, son of Rev. H. T. and F. M. Jones, was born in Independence, Miss., March 30, 1851; joined the Congregational Methodist Church in early life, which he lived a consistent member until death transferred him to the church triumphant, which took place on the morning of the thirteenth of July, 1876, at the age of twenty-five years, four months and four days.

Though young in years, he was rich in grace, by the school of affliction he was prepared for heaven. Some time before his death he spoke to the family, one by one, in reference to his falling asleep in Jesus, requesting them not to grieve, but meet him in the heavenly Canaan. His illness was of a protracted nature, and while he was gradually sinking apace, it seems the veil that partially obscured the spirit world was lifted for a time, and he permitted to see his glorified ones. He spoke of seeing his sister and nephew who passed away but a few years before, and in triumph entered the celestial city. Many sore bereavements have been the lot of his aged parents, but this, the heaviest of them all, seems to have been reserved for their old age. In this hour of trial may they say like Job: "Though thou slay me, yet will I trust in thee." So if the eyes and hopes of the bereaved will follow him over the shining way to glory and rest upon him there in his service and song, he has not lived in vain.

The Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1876.

TWO CHRISTIANS.

Two Christians traveled down a road,
Who viewed the world with different eyes;
The one was pleased with earth's abode,
The other longing for the skies.

For one, the heavens were so blue,
They filled his mind with fancies fond;
The other's eye kept piercing through
Only for that widen lies beyond.

For one, enchanting were the trees,
The distance was alvieacly dim;
The birds that flattered on the breeze
Nodded their pretty heads for him.

The other scarcely saw the flowers,
And never knew the trees were grand;
He did but count the days and hours
Till he might reach the promised land.

The one a little kind caress
Would to a tender rapture move;
He only op ed his lips to bless
The God who gave him things to love.

The other journeyed on his way,
Afraid to handle or to touch;
He only oped his lips to pray
He might not love a thing too much.

Which was the best? Decide who can.
Yet why should we decide 'twixt these?
We may approve the undecided man,
Nor yet the joyful man condemn.

He is a Christian who has found
That earth, as well as heaven, is sweet,
Nor less is he, who, heaven bound,
Has spurned the earth beneath his feet.

Good Words for September.

Ancient and Modern Smugglers.

One November evening last year I met one, an elderly London lawyer, standing at the end of one of the two jetties which formed the entrance to an important packet port on the South Coast. I was not there that cold, damp evening, wrapped up to the ears in coat and mufflers, and shivering all over with cold, by my own wish and desire; but I had run down from town to meet my second daughter, Lucy, who was returning from her Belgian school, and, the steamer being late, I had walked down to the end of the pier to strain my unaccustomed eyes with searching through the darkness of the stormy gathering night for the lights of the "Princess Hilda."

The little wooden lighthouse at the end of the pier was behind me, and the old keeper had just illumined its fiery-red eye, polished it up a bit, and, after locking the door and taking a last stare at me, was going home to his tea, leaving me all alone with the angry looking sea, tipped here and there with white, growing less and less distinct as the gloomy November night came on with rapid strides. I strode up and down, stamping my feet to drive away the cold, every now and then staring as if my eyes filled with water into the comfortless darkness; but in my unconscious anxiety preferring even this to the dull coffee-room of the little hotel, with its library of time-tables and directories, and its gallery of ancient almanacs.

While I was peering intently into the darkness, a man came up and stood beside me, and looked out to sea.

He was a thin, spare, middle-aged fellow, in a blue uniform, with brass buttons, and a badge on his cap.

"The steamer's a little late, isn't she?" said I.

"Yes, sir, but she was delayed in the Thames. The company have had a train to say so. She ought, though, to be here by this time."

He was speaking one of those sudden squalls which are so common at that time of the year came racing up, and the blinding rain beat in our faces.

"You had better come into our watch-house for a bit, sir," said my companion; "it's close by."

"Are you one of the company's servants, then?" said I.

"Oh, no, sir; I'm a customhouse officer." And, walking rapidly on, he brought me to a short-looking stone house, built just where the pier began to branch off from the harbor into the sea. On benches around the room were three or four men dressed in uniform like my friend, and in a corner-berth hard by another man was sleeping away in happy peacefulness, waiting himself for his turn of night duty. Over the chimney-piece were hanged, in an ornamental form, a few exceedingly ancient looking cutlasses and pistols—relics of by-gone days, when the protection of the country's revenue involved many a bloody battle and desperate encounter.

"I suppose you are well used to this sort of weather, my men," said I, by the way of opening a conversation.

They each assented to this, and seemed amused at the idea that they could not be accustomed to it.

"A fine night for smuggling, I daresay?" I went on.

"Well, sir, in old times it would have been," said one; "but there's too much steaming now-a-days to speak of such a little trumpery bit of lace and gloves and that, hardly worth talking about. Here, Frank?" addressing the man opposite.

"You see, sir," he went on to me, "these Liberals go on cutting down the tariff, so that there's nothing left worth while for us to run. Just cigars and spirits, and so on. Not but what the ladies do their bits of smuggling still, and very pretty they loves it too. Why, sir, this day they're wonderful clever at concealing lace and French gloves, though there's been no duty on them for years. We often, when examining the ladies' trunks, find two or three pair of gloves in an odd boot, or some lace, perhaps sewed inside a petticoat. We never says nothing, and they go home and tell their friends how clever they've been and done the customhouse."

"Still," said another man, who had been silent until now, "we do a little business now and then. Last week, sir, twelve cask of pitch came in one of our steamers with a lot of other goods. They pour the pitch hot into the casks, and when it's cold it's as hard as a stone almost. Now there was no examining this lot, except you took a pick-ax and broke the whole cask up. But our officer invented a kind of auger, and with a little oil, went right through the pitch in no time. We bored these said casks with this, and in the center of every one of them put a tin case with thirty pounds of cigars in it—three hundred in all altogether—a very pretty haul for us."

"That was better than your drawing-room furniture, Jack," said a young officer to one much older, who sat on a bench near me.

"Never mind that," growled the old man.

"What is that?" said I.

"Well, sir, it's rather hard upon Jack there to tell it; but you see, sir, he was at a large port in the north, and a gentleman comes down to the office and says that he was expecting what he called 'a sweet of drawing-room furniture—beautiful walnut wood,' he said; 'and all for a wedding present for his sister, who was going to get married. Would they take great care of it? he'd be so much obliged, and any expense.' They told him they'd look after it, but they weren't allowed to take anything. The next steamer, sure enough, the furniture came, and a lovely set it was, such couches and easy chairs and sofas! Well, sir, our men took the greatest care of it and saw it all packed safely in the railway truck and sent away, and we shouldn't have heard anything more about it, only at one of them large railway junctions, where luggage trains often have to wait for a long time, there was a policeman who'd served his time to a cabinet-maker, and he got wind of this furniture, and must get a look at it to see what sort of work them foreigners turned out. So he got to the truck, took up a bit of tarpaulin and examined the couch, which happened to be at the top. 'Pretty work,' said he to himself; 'but, my word, what a seat! they do stuff well over yonder there. It's queer feel, though; I wonder what they stuffs with.' Well, sir, his curiosity got over him, and he looks out to see if any one was coming, whips out his knife, and cuts a little slit where it wouldn't be seen, and pulls out to his great wonder, lucey! Every bit of it was brimful of excellent baccy. So they seized the whole lot; but, lor, what a wipe it was for our men, Jack there and his mates!"—Holiday Number of London Society.

Jefferson Hamilton, D. D.

Rev. F. M. Grace contributes to our Sunday School Magazine a brief sketch of the revered and lamented Dr. Hamilton. We quote as follows:

Dr. Hamilton was the preacher in Montgomery, at the great revival in 1845, when Joseph J. Hutchinson, afterward a distinguished preacher, as he was at the time a distinguished lawyer and politician, was converted. The citizens of Montgomery became so attached to Dr. Hamilton that they presented him with a house, but owing to his itinerant labors he was seldom permitted to occupy it. Notwithstanding this token, Dr. Hamilton lived and died a poor man. This he would have been, probably, even had his income been far greater than it was; for, although he and his family were extremely simple and frugal in their expenditures, he gave largely and systematically of his means to benevolent purposes. He was particularly interested in the missionary cause, and went on a tour of observation to the republics of South America, with a view to establish missions there. Why the church did not follow up his explorations was perhaps due to the war. At the General Conference of 1858 he was appointed agent of the Tract Society, and traveled extensively through the connection, collecting funds and organizing agencies for the distribution of religious literature. It was said by those who witnessed his efforts in other Conferences that no agent of the general interests of the church labored with greater eloquence and zeal than he did. His fame as a platform speaker rested upon no tricks of oratory, but upon the deep, solemn earnestness of his appeals in behalf of religious truth.

This is the three great auxiliary departments of education, missions and literature he at different times gained distinction, and established worthy memorials of his zeal. But the great, the constant, and the all-absorbing business of his life was the work of the pastorate. In this, for more than forty years, he labored with a zeal which knew no abatement.

For a brief term he served as a presiding elder, but by far the greater portions of his work was done in the larger stations in towns and cities. He built the church in Selma in 1858. He was twice stationed in Tuskaloosa. We have already mentioned his labors in Montgomery. The rest of his life was spent in Mobile, where he served the different churches for many years. As a member of the Conference he was active, always on important committees, to debate on every leading question, and a prime mover in most of our church enterprises. Considering his feeble health for he suffered a life-time with asthma, and was often unable to lie down for many successive nights, he did more work perhaps than any other man in his Conference. He was exact in the distribution of his time, never hurried through any service, and spent much time, in addition to his public labors, in private study and devotion. As a preacher he excelled in the clearness, force and energy of his utterances; as a worker, in the precision, versatility and untiring persistence of his efforts; as a man and a Christian, in the simplicity and godliness of his life, the purity of his habits, the warmth of his charity, and the zeal of his devotion. He was facile princeps of the old Alabama Conference.

A little girl in Mt. Vernon street cut her finger a few days since, and the fond mother ordered John to run quickly to Charles street and bring a doctor. "If one isn't in," were the orders, "leave word and go to the next." John obeyed orders, and twenty-one doctors called in the course of an hour.

"Do you feel that you love Christ?" was asked of an aged and dying Christian. "Better than that," was the reply, "Christ loves me." Rest in Christ's love to you rather than in your love to him.

The Rev. Norval Wilson, of the Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, died on the ninth of August, at the residence of Mr. James M. Brown, near Charlestown, Jefferson county, West Va. Norval Wilson was a leader in our Israel—a prince and a great man. He has served his generation well, and in a good old age has fallen on sleep. Rev. S. G. Ferguson, writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate, says:

Our venerable and beloved brother, the Rev. Norval Wilson, of the Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, died on the ninth of August, at the residence of Mr. James M. Brown, near Charlestown, Jefferson county, West Va. As expected, he was ready to meet the Master's call. He was unable to speak for nearly forty-eight hours immediately preceding his death. The writer was frequently with him during his sickness, and by his bed when he "fell asleep in Jesus." Two days before his death he was suffering very much. The writer asked him if he wanted anything, to which he replied: "I want to go home." This was the last sentence to which he gave distinct utterance. We shall not soon look upon his like again. He was in his seventy-third year.

AN IMMENSE COUNTRY.—A Scotch friend tells us the following story, suggested by our article on "The Immense in Rural Life," as illustrating the ideas of some persons as to the immensity of this country:

A Scotch peasant and his wife were sitting by their fireside, he smoking his pipe at the ingle, when the following colloquy took place:

Wife—"Hah, can ye tell me frae whaur the bacey comes?"

Husband—"Frae America."

Wife—"An' whur is that?"

Husband—"Awa in the sea."

Wife—"Ah! what sort o' country is it?"

Husband—"It's a muckle gran' countrie, and has a loch in it as big as a' the sea that's around it."

Wife—"It maun be muckle gran' then?"

Husband—"So gran' that if ye were to thirl the whole of Ireland in it, it wad' no mak' nae mair disturbance than thirling a wee stane into the sea."

Wife—"Hech, it's to be hop'd that the Lord in his gude mercy will thirl it into that loch, for it must be unco gran' and deep that Ireland wad' no mak' a disturbance in it."

Husband—"The land is sae great that if ye were to tak' the whole of England o'er there it wad' be nae mair to it than John O'Groat's house to the whole of Scotland."

Wife—"But is na Scotland as gran' a countrie?"

Husband—"Well, Jean, if ye were to put Scotland into a corner of the woods in that countrie ye wad' ha'e tint it!"

Wife—"Diina a think a Scotsman could be tint it by the reek o' the whisky."

GOD'S WORD GIVETH LIGHT.—The following shows how the word of God reaches the human heart, even in heathen lands:

"A native minister of Madagascar, now an assistant in the revision of the book of Genesis, attributes his conversion entirely to his having accidentally met with a small scrap torn from a Malagasy Bible. While walking past the spot where the memorial church of Ambatur-kanga now stands he saw on the ground a small scrap of printed paper. Taking it up, he found it was a mere fragment of the book of Psalms. He began to read, and was especially struck with one verse, which speaks of the power and majesty of God. He could not get rid of the impression it made on his mind that the God revealed in the Bible was the true and living God. He accordingly sought out some Christians, and inquired about the faith they possessed. The result was that he accepted Christ as his Savior, joined himself to the persecuted company of believers, and endured with them privation and loss for Christ's sake. He has now been for some years a native pastor, and is a most zealous and godly man."

"WHAT MADE THE DIFFERENCE?"—A few days since I was with one of the best and holiest of God's ministers, and he said to me, speaking of this subject of power, that a number of years ago he preached a certain sermon. When he got through one of his elders stepped up to him and said: "My dear pastor, I hope that you will never preach that sermon again; it is one of the poorest you have ever preached;" and he said to himself: "I will not." Time rolled on. The Spirit came with power upon that people. Night after night the pastor was pressed with extra service and work. He had to resort to his old pile of sermons. He took down the condemned one and preached it with a prepared heart, warm and gushing with love, and it seemed to glow and flash with light. That same elder came to him at its close and said: "My dear pastor, you never preached such a sermon in your life!" And scores of souls were given to him as the result.

What made the difference? Ah! God now used the sermon. Before, it was only man dull and lifeless man preaching to men like himself. Now it was given forth by a consecrated soul, on fire with love and faith, and it was preached with demonstration and power, and God was in it. Oh! this power comes only from heaven, from heaven, and is imparted only through consecrated souls!—N. C. Presbyterian.

"Parson tells me, sir," said a British farmer once, speaking of that extraordinary race of people, the gypsies, "that their origin is lost in the mists of antiquity; and I am bound to say I believe him, for greater rogues don't live."

Individual faithfulness, and to the energy of the private conscience, God has committed the real history and progress of mankind.

Religious Intelligence.

—The postal system recently introduced into Japan works well. A missionary who passed from Yokio to Nugata overland found a post-office in every town to which he came. In most places the inscription "post-office," in English, stood over the door. The facilities for sending letters are almost all that can be desired, although there are as yet very few railways in Japan.

—Religious persecution, it would appear from statements made to the Leeds Baptist District Association, is not yet at an end in England. The Baptist minister of Boroughbridge stated that the American clergyman at that village punishes the children who visit the Baptist or Wesleyan Sunday school by making them objects of derision to the other scholars of the church day school, which all are obliged to attend. Other delegates from the rural districts made similar reports of persecution.

—The work around Harpoot, in Eastern Turkey, continues to be greatly prospered. The divisions, against which the Independent felt itself constrained to write strongly, have almost if not quite passed away. Congregations which were in a depressed state report a revived increase of numbers. At Temran the congregation has grown from eighty to two hundred, and overfills the best place of worship which the members have been able to secure while they have been waiting for three years to get permission to build a chapel.

—The Anglican Bishopric of Calcutta is still vacant. Nobody desires it. It was offered to Drs. Farrar and Moorhouse, who declined it. When the project of a new diocese, with its seat at Lahore, was set on foot, it was hoped that the See of Calcutta, by being thus reduced, would be more acceptable. But it does not seem to be so. The Rev. Alfred Blomfield has just been offered it, but respectfully declines. The new Bishopric of Lahore has been tendered to the Rev. Francis Barhig, son of the Bishop of Durham.

—According to a San Francisco paper the Methodists in that city maintain a Chinese church of forty members, a Sunday school, and a night school; also, refuge and home for Chinese women. The Presbyterians have a Chinese mission church of sixty members, a home for women, and an evening school of one hundred and one pupils. The Baptists have an evening school attended by seventy scholars, and a Sunday congregation of forty Chinamen. There are thirteen other schools sustained by the churches for the benefit of the Chinese population.

—It will be a surprise to many to learn that the Mohammedans outnumber the Christians in British India fifty to one. There are less than 900,000 Christians, while the number of Mohammedans is estimated to reach quite 50,000,000. In some districts they form eighty per cent. of the population. The Pall Mall Gazette says: "There seems little reason to doubt that the Mohammedans have gained ground far more rapidly among the Hindoos under our British rule than they did in the days of their own supremacy."

After an absence of three hundred years the Benedictine monks are about to invade Scotland, and settle at Fort Augustus, in Invernessshire, on land which has been given by Lord Lovat. The fort was originally built for three hundred soldiers, and can be converted into a monastery with very little trouble. It was the headquarters of the Duke of Cumberland after the battles of Culloden. It is built away among the mountains, and the view obtained from it includes four miles length of Lochness. It was here that the order went out for the massacre of Glencoe.

—The Protestant Episcopal chapel and dispensary at Wuchang, China, were recently the scenes of an unpleasant commotion. Several mothers missed their children, and the report was started that the missionaries had stolen them in order to manufacture medicine out of their eyes. It was this same foolish belief which started the massacre of French priests and nuns at Tien-Tsin, some years ago. For a while the crowd was very much excited; but, through the kindly companionship of the missionary physician, the assistance of the Chinese officials, and, above all, the finding of the missing children, the disorder was allayed without damage to life or property.

Some of the results of the great revival of last winter appear plainly in the statistics of the Presbyterian church, which have just been published by Dr. Hatfield. He reports a total of 337,210 communicants, showing a gain of over 29,000 for a year. To go a year since the reunion has the increase been so large. In 1874 it was 23,000; but the gains of 1872-3 combined do not equal those of the present year, and of the aggregate increase since 1871, amounting to 78,822, more than one third was made the past year. The number of ministers reported is 4,744, an increase of 30 only, which is much less than that of any year since 1872. The candidates for the ministry number 705, which also shows a decline from any year previous to 1875. There is a gain of 21 licentiates, there being in all 321. The net gain of churches was 78, making the present number 5,057. Of Sunday-school members there are 353,137, an increase of 35,000. The total of contributions reaches $1,810,293, which has not been equaled since the reunion, excepting 1872. The item for education drops off from $381,000 to $81,000, and that for church erection from $277,000 to $76,000. These and other deficiencies are covered by the item "miscellaneous," which is increased from $900,000 to over $2,000,000.

Death is the only monastery, the tomb is the only veil, and the grave that adjoins the convent is the bitterest mock of its futility.

Our Young People.

LITTLE MISS MEDDLESOME.

Little Miss Meddlesome, scattering crumbs
Into the library, noisily comes—
Twirls off her apron, flits open some books,
And into the work-basket, rummaging, looks,

Out go the spools, spinning over the floor;
Beeswax and needle case stepped out before;
She tosses the paper rule, and plays with the floss,
And says to herself, "Now, wish I mayn't be cross."

Little Miss Meddlesome climbs to the shelf,
Since no one is looking, and mischievous elf,
Pulls down the dictionaries, the cracked clock stops,
And sprinkles the carpet with damaging drops.

She turns over the ottoman, frightens the bird,
And sees that the chairs to a medley are stirred:
Then creeps on the sofa, and, all in a heap,
Drops out of her frolicsome mischief asleep.

But here comes the nurse with its shaking her head,
And frowns at the mischief asleep on the bed,
But let us hope when Miss Meddlesome's slumber is o'er
She may wake from good dreams and do mischief no more.

My Jewel Story.

I want to have a talk with you, children.

I know that I have one thing needful to interest you, and that is love for you all, big and little, sick and well. And one thing I will promise, that I will be not to use any big words. So, believing that this promise will satisfy you, I will make my courtesy like old Mother Hubbard, and say: "I am Sister Charlotte, who wants just now to tell you what she has been thinking of to-day." You could not guess if you were to try, so I will tell you anyhow.

I have been thinking nearly all day of some jewels—gems beautiful and rare, forming a necklace more costly than any other my eyes ever saw; and, what is more, the jewels made me think of you, for I have found out that each of you owns a necklace of them. Two of my Sunday-school scholars this morning showed me two rings that had been given to them for a birthday present. They were very proud of them, yet they did not even speak once of the necklaces around their necks, for they were there as surely as the rings were on their fingers, for I saw them gleaming.

They did not know that they were these necklaces, and perhaps you do not, so I will tell you how it came to pass that you have such a costly present.

A long, long time ago a great King dwelt among a certain people. Few, however, knew that he was a king, for he had left his own kingdom, where the valleys were always filled with flowers and the people always good and happy, to come and teach this people to be both, for they did not know the right way to be happy or good; so this great King walked and lived among them like a poor man. But everybody knew that he was not a common man, for wherever he went he did such wonderful things, and spoke such wonderful words, as no man had ever seen or heard, while his loving kindness and tender mercy made people flock from all parts of that wide, wide country to hear him teach, and to feel his power over the sick in body and soul.

One day he had been working many wonders and teaching great truths that the wisest men around him had never known. While he was doing this some women in the crowd began to talk among themselves, saying: "This great, good Teacher will leave us some day, and we may see his face no more. But if he would only put his hands upon our children, and bless them, we would be happy all our lives." So several of them took their children, little girls and boys, like you, and made their way to where the Master stood with the stern men, who, when they saw the mothers, forbade them to come near lest they should trouble the Master. But there was no sternness in the smile that shone on the Master's face as he turned and took the little ones to his arms and heart and blessed them, placing on their necks a band of jewels that with their luster made the stern men wonder. They had never dreamed that there were such lovely jewels, much less that children would wear them. Yet so it was, and these gems have come down through many, many years to you. Every child that comes into the world is an heir to these, and wears them in a necklace round the neck, whether he knows it or not, a gift that no man can steal away, that time cannot cause to crumble or wear away, one that the earth with all its mines of gold cannot buy, jewels that can never be lost, for they are the only ones you can take with you when you die.

The other day I went to see a little girl buried. How sad I felt I cannot tell. I never saw the mother's head bent down in weeping, and saw the stillness of the little limbs that never would move about again in fun or work for mother. But as I looked through my tears at the pale little face I saw a sudden gleam of jewels on its breast, and there the necklace lay shining in colors that must have been caught from the rainbow round the throne of God, for their light seemed to show me heaven open, and the little girl, and oh! so many others in Jesus' arms and clustering round him.

Children, can you not see the jewels? Here they are: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

SISTER CHARLOTTE.

From Our Little Friends.

BRUNT PRAIRIE, Aug. 17, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: I will tell you something of our Sabbath school. We have not organized one as yet, but we will soon. This is a blessing it has never been my pleasure to enjoy. I know I will appreciate it very highly.

I am a member of the Methodist Church; have joined this year, and I intend to live a Christian. I find it a sweet delight to read my Bible. I do intend to follow its holy precepts. I am going to do something for the missionary cause this year sure. I think of the poor little children who are denied this treasure. I am a little girl, but I know the good Lord finds work for willing hands to do.

Mr. Editor, I cannot tell you how much your dear paper is appreciated in our family circle. We style it a very great blessing. I always read the Child's Corner with interest to my dear little sisters, who are younger than myself—Rosa, Daisie, and Elloie. We have such a lovely baby brother; mamma calls him her "little preacher." I do hope he will make a good and useful man. I have a dear, kind papa, and a precious mamma. I have many blessings to thank my blessed Savior for—kind parents, dear little sisters and brother, and our good pastor, Bro. Freeman. I will be so sad when he leaves us. He is very kind to little children. His visits to our home are always a sacred joy. He always prays with us.

Dear Mr. Editor, please excuse my long letter. I did not intend writing so long, but you seem like a friend. I have always known—not at all like a stranger. I hope the good Lord will ever bless you for your labor of love, and, when this life is finished, that your unworthy little correspondent will meet you in that "sunbright clime." Farewell for awhile.

Your little friend,

LILLIA M. WILLIAMS.

My Mother Knows Best.

A party of little girls stood talking beneath my window. Some nice plan was on foot; they were going into the woods, and they meant to make oak-leaf trimming, and pick berries, and carry luncheon.

"Now," said they to one of their number, "Ellen, run home and ask your mother if you may go. Tell her we are all going, and you must go also." Ellen, a pretty little girl in a green cape bonnet, skipped across the way, and went into a house opposite. She was gone some time. The little girls waited for her very impatiently. At length the door opened, and Ellen came down the steps. She did not seem to be in a hurry to join her companions, and they cried out: "You have got leave?" "Are you coming?"

Ellen shook her head, and said that her mother would not let her go.

"Oh!" cried the girls; "it is too bad!"

"Not go?" "It is really unkind in your mother." "What a shame!" "I would make her let you." "I would go whether or no."

"My mother knows best," was Ellen's answer, and it was a beautiful one. Her lip quivered a little, for I supposed she wished to go, and was much disappointed not to get leave; but she did not get angry or pout, and her voice was very gentle, but very firm, when she said: "My mother knows best."

There are a great many occasions when mothers do not see fit to give their children leave to go where and to do what they wish; and how often are they rebellious and pouting, and angry in consequence of it?

But is this the way in which children should receive their mothers' orders? No. It is not pleasing God. The right way is pleasing to God. The right way is cheerful obedience to your mother's decision. Trust her, and smooth down your ruffled feelings by the sweet and beautiful thought, that "Mother knows best." It will save you many tears and much sorrow. It is the gratitude you owe to her who has done and suffered so much for you.

Among the ill effects of drinking habits none is worse than upon the victim's own soul. Intoxication, however slight, blunts the finer sensibilities, the delicate sympathies, the sensitive conscience, and all the spiritual aptitudes and inspirations. The danger is augmented by the fact that a drinking man does not see it.

A gentleman having an appointment with another who was habitually unpunctual, to his great surprise found him writing. He thus addressed him: "Why, I see you are here first at last. You were always behind before; but I am glad to see you have become early of late."

There are about five hundred Indians in Florida, where they inhabit the Everglades, and are believed to hold a few negroes in bondage. They make pets of their pigs, and the porkers follow them like dogs.

The now famous maxim, "In necessary things unity, in doubtful things liberty, in all things charity," is one that Richard Baxter dug out of an obscure German treatise by Rupert Meldenius on the peace of the church.

Several Evils.

A correspondent wishes us to notice a number of evils under the sun which he avers prevail in society and in the church.

Talking and meddling. Perhaps he means by this meddlesome talk, interfering with other people's affairs, or, may be, simply gossip. Gossip makes up the personals of private life, and has to do most offensively with character, motives, and conduct. It especially delights in things which other people have no business with, and in dissecting the infirmities and errors of our neighbors. If our friends will take pains to notice, they will be surprised to see how much of current conversation is taken up with talk about absent people. One reason of this is that other and more profitable topics require information, thought, and intelligence which the average meddler does not possess. It does not require much mental caliber, nor large intellectual resources, to begin with the weather and to end with the people mutually known. Some, it is true, in their personal talk, are sweet-spirited, charitable, and reserved, but when not restrained by conscience, and by a pure heart, the tendency is to speak evil, and to take unwarrantable liberties. Fallen human nature seems to delight in this thing, and men and women are never so wide awake, nor so full of satisfaction, as when engaged in picking flaws in character, or commenting on conduct. Good breeding, intelligence, and religion are the cure for gossip. Dr. Holland thinks intelligence alone will do it. But we doubt. There must be a full hemk, a good heart, and a training to good manners, in order that this evil may be reformed. When the conviction prevails that gossip—meddling talk—is a mark of ignorance, vulgar breeding, and the lack of an enlightened conscience, it will become less common in society, and altogether unknown in the church.

Slander. This is near of kin to gossip. Careless talk about others may have in it no malice, and no purpose of injury, but it starts the hurtful insinuation, and it travels and grows. The circle of gossip, like a ripe thistle head, opens its store of mischief, and the tiny seeds are scattered up and down the earth. The malicious slanderer—the man who, of set purpose, defames another, steals his good name, and blackens his reputation—is among the vilest of wretches. There is law both civil and ecclesiastical for such offenders, and it is to be hoped that there are few of them in any church. We know of none. Our correspondent may have cases within his field of observation, but we believe such an offense is rare among professed Christians.

Dishonesty in business. There are kinds of business in which a Christian man cannot engage. He cannot patronize lotteries, deal in liquors, either by retail or wholesale, and he cannot touch any trade that compromises his honor and integrity. The dishonesty complained of, however, we suppose refers to the non-payment of debts, and the violation of business contracts. Honesty is indeed a comparatively scarce commodity in the world. The temptation is not always related to cover up property. There are bankrupteies that are so managed as to defraud the creditors and leave the bankrupt's family in affluence. Many ways there are in which men evade payment, and conscience, in regard to pecuniary obligations, has become sadly perverted. An honest man pays his debts, or spends his life in the earnest endeavor to do so. Business integrity in these times is one of the strongest tests of Christian character. Whatever the profession may be, the man who does not acknowledge the obligation to pay, and do his best to satisfy, his creditors, has no right to the Christian name.

Betrayal of domestic confidence. The case seems to relate to those who share our hospitality, or are received as friends and intimates in our home circle, and who proclaim abroad what should be held as sacred and inviolable. Affairs in an exemplary and well-ordered home can generally stand the scrutiny, and not much detriment can follow upon publicity. But our private and domestic concerns should be sacred in the eyes of those who are received at our hearth-stones. To blab and talk about them is a base betrayal of hospitality and friendship, and a thing that people of refinement and delicacy of feeling will never do. Coarse and cynical natures may pose their way into families, and take delight in exposing and misrepresenting the privacies of other people's homes, but the Christian—gentleman or lady—would as soon pick your pocket as be guilty of such a vulgar offense against decency and good manners.

We have now mentioned in their order the several evils of which our correspondent complains. He avers they are leprosies in all communities, that to some extent they taint the churches, and that they are the worst pests of society. They are bad things, it must be admitted, and should by all means be put away. As the beginning of a reformation, let each reader of the ADVOCATE clear himself. Let him cease gossiping, and talk about other than personal matters; let him beware of that slander which results from speaking unadvisedly with his lips; let him keep clear of unlawful business, pay his debts, or keep trying while he lives, and let him guard his neighbor's domestic sanctities even as he would his own. The cure of this catalogue of evils is love. Christ's religion will do it wherever it prevails. The golden rule, well kept, will put an end to them, and to all the moral evils that burden and afflict society.

Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: On the twenty-eighth of August, at a called meeting of the board of trustees of Centenary College, Prof. D. M. Rush, of Alabama, was unanimously elected professor of mathematics, and adjunct professor of natural science. At the regular meeting in July President Wilson, of Warren College, was put in nomination, and elected to the chair made vacant by the resignation of Prof. Holcombe. At that time Dr. Wilson had not been consulted; by letter since he informed us that he had left the recitation room for the pulpit exclusively. Mr. Rush is well known in Alabama as one well qualified for the responsible position of an educator, and we are glad to know from him that he accepts the chair to which he has been elected.

Centenary presents to our people a corps of teachers fully capable of giving a thorough collegiate training to any youth who may be confided to the care of President Andrews. It will open promptly at the usual time (the first Monday in October,) and we are glad to hear that quite a number of young men—several from this city—have already signified their intention of entering upon its regular course. In these "shrinking" times it is amazing to see our friends of Louisiana and Mississippi sending their sons far away to schools that rank at home only as good high schools. There must certainly be a charm in distance. Next to this, it is amazing to see those who know but little of the comparative worth of these schools so fully enlisted against our own earnest and self-denying faculties who, equally with the ministry of the church, deserve a support both by reason of competency and devotion to the moral and religious as well as the intellectual training of the youth confided to their care. As a general rule, the nearer a boy is to his home the better can he be looked after, and the same training under his own skies is much to be preferred to that which is received beyond the horizon.

During the past year there were accounts of disturbances on the river below and above Jackson, but these troubles never reached the town, and all this part of the State has received from its citizens a permanent quieting, not likely to be interrupted any more during the official life of President Grant. The commencement occasion in July is admitted by all accustomed to attend annually to have been the most brilliant which the institution has known since the war, and comparing favorably with any in its history. Dr. Rivers has given you a well-balanced account of it. The doctor himself revived the former glory of the house, and Dr. Munsey and other distinguished guests composed the present. The young gentlemen who graduated, and those who spoke for the societies, did themselves and their friends much credit. The audience was very large, and the hospitality of Jackson had lost none of the richness and heartiness of the olden time.

The whole was a decided advance upon the year before. The college discipline had never been so good; added to this, the church in Jackson had recently had a gracious revival. Here were elements of hope and gratitude which will have their due weight, we trust, with our friends in Mississippi and Louisiana. The only drawback was in the regret which all felt at the loss of Prof. Holcombe, who, after years of most successful application and devotion to the noble work of training young men, retired from the college, carrying with him the love and gratitude of scores who have been molded both by the thoroughness of his teaching and the spotless purity of his character.

Centenary has some very strong friends, and a great many very lukewarm ones, who hold themselves ready to inform her fully when she acquires an ample endowment or experiences such change in her circumstances as will require but little else than the cheerful acceptance of completed success. Meanwhile, she is giving preachers and the sons of preachers not a few their tuition, and maintaining that dignity of the church which demands that our Conferences shall be patrons of learning in the highest sense—that is, the educators of her youth.

During the next session board will be furnished at the steward's hall for $10 per month, payment in advance. This, together with the low price of tuition, and the accessibility of Jackson to all who live on or near the greatest thoroughfare in the country, the Mississippi river, presents the cheapest opportunity to citizens generally of the Southwest for giving their sons the advantage of a liberal education.

Yours truly, J. C. KEENER.

ENDOWMENT.

MR. EDITOR: What our Southern colleges need most at this time is to be enshrined in the hearts of our Southern people. Love is a splendid endowment, and especially when strong enough to produce earnest prayer and sustained effort for success. The pusillanimous wail about the loss of property which has gone up from our people for the last ten years has had a worse effect upon our schools than upon any other interest of the church. One of these evil results is that many have come to look upon education as a luxury, whereas it is a necessity—a necessity, I mean, not so much to the general elevation of society, but to the very existence of the church. Many have come to regard it as a work which the church may perform or neglect just as she pleases—that it is in no sense obligatory, but only expedient, and expedient only when the country is abounding in wealth, and colleges are or may be supported by the interest of large sums invested as endowment. Thinking of it in this way, they have transferred the whole matter to the department of secular affairs, and do not feel bound either to love or pray for or work for these institutions. But the true old doctrine on this subject—the doctrine which has been verified by history—is that the work of education is included in every correct, enlarged definition of the church. In other words, a people opposing or neglecting this interest can no more make a just claim to be any part of the true church of Jesus Christ than if that people should oppose the preaching of the gospel at home, or refuse to send it to the heathen abroad. This doctrine is stated not to be argued, for it is assumed to be true. And if true, then what follows? Why, just this: that all the Conferences should either build up institutions of learning, or identify themselves with those already established, and rally to their support in every possible way, and with all possible zeal, and that, too, whether the schools are rich in bonds and stocks or not. Every part of the church, even to the remotest corner, and every member, even to the most ignorant, ought to be interested in some educational system, and consequently in some educational center. For the obligation to support these schools, growing, as it does, out of the very nature and constitution of the church, is independent of the fact whether the schools themselves are rich or poor, just as the obligation of any local society to support its pulpit, or of the whole connection to support its general missionary society, is independent of the fact whether the pulpit or the society is or is not endowed with a sum the interest of which is sufficient to meet the demands upon it. The only endowment of our pulpits and our missionary society is the love and zeal of the laymen and preachers of the whole church. This is the endowment for which we now plead. Let the preachers and laymen of the Alabama Conference give this to the Southern University, and they will put it at once on the high road of prosperity. Let them pray for it, and speak and talk and preach and work for it. Let them report (as they have been asked by resolution of the board) to Dr. Smith, the president, all the boys and young men they can who are ready or wanting to go to college. Let them send up their own sons, and the sons of their neighbors, if they can, and the first of November will witness the halls full of young men, ready for the work of the year. This indictment can be given, and given at once. I will close this communication by stating the following occurrence which took place not long since:

One of our men received from a friend the offer of the free board and tuition of his daughter provided she would take four other girls with her to school. But notwithstanding he is poor, has a large family, and could have met the conditions, he declined the proposition, as he told me, for these reasons: 1. The girls and boys of this section should be educated at home—it is better for them. 2. Our own colleges are worthy of our support, and need it. 3. If the laymen and preachers of the different Conferences do not support their own schools they can neither expect nor ask others to do so. 4. To send our sons and daughters away now is to make war on our established centers of education. His daughter, with four or five others, will be in Tuskegee on the twenty-fifth of September.

Address

To the Bishops, the Ministers, and the Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dear Fathers and Brethren:

We, the commissioners appointed by authority of the General Conferences, respectively, of the above named churches, to remove all obstacles to formal fraternity and to adjust all existing difficulties between them, deem it proper, in advance of our report to the General Conferences of our respective churches, to communicate to you, in general terms, the results of the recent harmonious session of our Joint Commission.

Pursuant to previous appointment, we convened at Cape May, N. J., on the sixteenth day of August, 1876, and were favored by the attendance of all the members of both Boards of Commissioners.

After a written communication from the commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was received and answered by the commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church, both boards met in joint session, the labors of which were continued during seven days.

We have had a full and free conference and interchange of views respecting the important matters that claimed our united consideration.

If any in the churches entertained the fear, previous to our meeting, that we could not attain complete harmony of sentiment touching the momentous questions to be determined, they will be rejoiced to learn, that having given due attention to all questions involved in the proper construction of a platform of complete fraternity between the two great branches of Episcopal Methodism in the United States, we have arrived at the settlement of every matter affecting, as we suppose, the principles of a lasting and cordial adjustment.

We have the satisfaction to declare that our aspirations for harmony of views on vital points have been realized. By Divine guidance, as we trust, we have been able, after a frank interchange of views, and prayerful endeavor, to harmonize all differences, and to arrive at the desired consummation of a unanimous agreement of complete fraternity. We believe that no principle of honor, on either side, has been invaded. We struck the key-note of brotherly love till it sounded high and clear, and so have been enabled to reach the elements of perfect harmony. No divergence of sentiment mars the complete unanimity of the joint commission touching the essential principles of fraternization.

At the beginning of our consultations one great question seemed to overshadow all others. It concerns the relation of the two churches to each other and to Episcopal Methodism. To this important matter our most earnest thought and prayerful deliberation were first directed, and the result attained occasioned the interchange of rejoicing congratulations between the members of the Joint Commission.

We adopted without a dissentient voice the following

DECLARATION AND BASIS OF FRATERNITY.

As to the status of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and their co-ordinate relation as legitimate branches of Episcopal Methodism, each of said churches is a legitimate branch of Episcopal Methodism in the United States, having a common origin in the Methodist Episcopal Church organized in 1784; and since the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was consummated in 1845, by the voluntary exercise of the right of the Southern Annual Conferences, ministers and members, to adhere to that Communion, it has been an evangelical church, reared on scriptural foundations, and her ministers and members, with those of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have constituted one Methodist family, though in distinct ecclesiastical connections.

It was next incumbent on us to consider the question concerning conflicting claims to church property, and some special cases that could not conveniently be referred to the operation of a general rule.

There were two principal questions to be considered with regard to the church property in dispute between local societies of the two churches:

FIRST.—As to the legal ownership of said property.

SECOND.—As to whether it will consist with strict equity or promote Christian harmony or the cause of religion to dispossess those societies now using church property which was originally intended for their use and occupancy, and of which they have acquired possession, though they may have lost legal title to it by their transfer from the one church to the other.

We have considered the papers in all cases that have been brought to our notice. These arose in the following States: Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Tennessee, Louisiana, North Carolina, and South Carolina. In respect of some of these cases we have given particular directions; but for all other cases the Joint Commission unanimously adopted the following:

RULES FOR THE ADJUSTMENT OF ADVERSE CLAIMS TO CHURCH PROPERTY.

RULE I. In cases not adjudicated by the Joint Commission, any society of either church, constituted according to its discipline, now occupying the church property, shall remain in possession thereof; provided, that where there is now, in the same place, a society of more members attached to the other church, and which has hitherto claimed the use of the property, the latter shall be entitled to possession.

RULE II. Forasmuch as we have no power to annul decisions respecting church property made by the State Courts, the Joint Commission ordains in respect thereof,

(1.) In cases in which such a decision has been made, or in which there exists an agreement, the same shall be carried out in good faith.

(2.) In communities where there are two societies, one belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the other to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which have adversely claimed the church property, it is recommended that, without delay, they amicably compose their differences irrespective of the strict legal title, and settle according to Christian principles the equities of the particular case, and so far as practicable, according to the principle of the aforegoing rule.

But if such settlement cannot be speedily made, then the question shall be referred for equitable decision to three arbitrators, one to be chosen by each claimant from their respective societies, and the two thus chosen shall select a third person not connected with either of said churches; and the decision of any two of them shall be final.

(3.) In communities in which there is but one society Rule I. shall be faithfully observed in the interest of peace and fraternity.

RULE III. Whenever necessary to carry the aforegoing rules into effect, the legal title to the church property shall be accordingly transferred.

RULE IV. These rules shall take effect immediately.

In order to further promote the peaceful results contemplated by this Joint Commission, and to remove as far as may be all occasion, and especially to forestall all further occasion for hostility between the two churches, we recommend to members of both as a wise rule of settlement where property is in contest, and one or both are weak, that they compose their differences by uniting in the same communion; and in all cases, that the ministers and members recognize each other, in all relations of fraternity, and as possessed of ecclesiastical rights and privileges of equal dignity and validity. They should each receive from the other ministers and members in good standing with the same alacrity and credit as if coming from their own church, and without interference with each other's institutions or missions they should nevertheless co-operate in all Christian enterprises.

It is not to be supposed in respect of some matters of mere opinion that all ministers and members in either church will be in accord; but we trust and believe that a spirit of fellowship and mutual regard will pervade the reconciled ranks of the entire ministry and membership of both churches. We believe, also, that their allegiance to the cause of the great Master will triumph over all variation of personal sentiments, and will so exalt the claims of brotherly affection that from this auspicious hour a new epoch in Methodism will begin its brighter history, so that we shall know no unfraternal Methodism in the United States, or even this wide world. To all we commend the wise counsels given in 1820 to missionaries and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Wesleyan Connection in the Canadas by Bishop McKendree and the Wesleyan committee—namely: Feel that you are one with your brethren, embarked in the same great cause and eminently of the same religious family; and if any warm spirits rise up and trouble you, remember that you are to act on the principles now sanctioned and avowed by the two connections, and not upon local prejudices.

We cannot restrain the expression of our united congratulations to both of the great churches whose commissions we have executed in uniting between them the broken cords of affectionate and brotherly fraternization. Henceforth they may hail each other as from the auxiliary ranks of one great army. The only differences they will foster will be those friendly rivalries that spring from earnest emulations to further to the utmost the triumphs of the gospel of peace. Whatever progress is made by the one church or by the other will occasion general joy. They will rejoice in each other's success as a common good; and, amid the thousand glorious memories of Methodism, they will go forward devoted to their own work of spreading scriptural holiness over these lands.

Two by two the apostles began the promulgation of Christianity in the world. They were companion evangelists, distinct in their several individuality, but they were at the same time one in spirit, purpose, and fellowship. Their itinerant successors in the chief churches of American Methodism in restored fraternity will vie with each other to wave the banner of the cross in this Western World, and henceforth will proclaim that these churches are one in spirit, one in purpose, one in fellowship.

Astronomers tell us of dual stars revolving together in mutual relation and harmony, whose differing colors are so much the complement of each other as to produce a pure white light of exceeding brilliancy. The dual churches of American Methodism will henceforth revolve in mutual fellowship and harmony, so much the complement of one another as together to produce the pure and blended light of Christian charity and fraternal love. These fraternized churches have no further occasion for sectional disputes or acrimonious differences. They may henceforth remember their common origin, pursue their fruit-bearing work, and rejoice in their own and each other's success while engaged in the same great mission of converting the world to Christ.

Distinctive features of profession and polity are bound up with the name of Episcopal Methodism. That form of Christian propagandism and ecclesiastical economy has special elements of power and qualities of attraction that commend its efficiency in proclaiming a pure gospel to the world. Its cardinal doctrines of free salvation by faith, and of the witness of the Spirit; its scriptural articles of Christian belief; its primitive system of church government, its sententious demand of those who would join its societies, its itinerant plan of preaching the gospel, its Wesleyan simplicity and orthodoxy, its urgency of the practice of a holy life, its liberal and systematic benevolence, its support of educational institutions, its promotion of Sabbath-school instruction, its vigilant care for the deserving poor, its provision for superannuated ministers, their widows and children, its world-wide missionary enterprise, and its general activity in the dissemination of gospel truth, are one and the same in the Methodist Episcopal Church and in the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Far away in dark portions of the earth to which their missionaries have penetrated a Divine light is breaking on the long night of paganism. For the elevation of humanity, it is more than the wand of an enchanter. There, as well as here, Methodist doctrines and usages wear their own peculiar and heaven-blessed distinctiveness, and seem to presage the dawn of that era of gladness when the claims of universal brotherhood will commingle with the full glory of the Millennium. Episcopal Methodism was never more strong, and influential, and never appeared to feel more the quickening impulse of its glorious destiny, than it does at the present day.

It is eminently fit, therefore, that in its native realm and wide-extended home in these United States, whence its spirit and power go forth like swelling anthems of gladness to bless mankind, it should bear along the blended sweetness of fraternal harmony. Then will its cadences roll down the ages enriched with the true spirit of the gospel; for the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy, and the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.

The flowing streams of gospel truth, issuing from the depths of the sacred fountains in the Holy Scriptures, as they are borne to thirsty thousands through the instrumentality of a called and qualified ministry and made effectual to salvation by the mighty working of Divine power, will increase their refreshing freshness when all the itinerant ranks of Episcopal Methodism shall move together in fraternal concord. Then, as chosen vessels of grace, may they bear the living water of salvation to all the world. Contemplating the prospect of complete fraternity among them, we are led to look back to those inspiring scenes of primitive times when the company of the disciples were of one heart and mind, steadfast in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, having all things common, continuing daily in the temple, praising God, and having favor with all the people.
